Crack-up of Bomber in Texas Fatal to Two; Bodies Burned.

By the Associated Press.

Marion, Va., Oct. 25.—Four persons died almost instantly late today and a fifth succumbed a half hour later of injuries received when an airplane crashed shortly after taking off from Marion for Bluefield, W. Va.

The dead:

Mr. and Mrs. H. F. Chappell, of Welch, W. Va.

R. B. Tidewell, of Bluefield.

Charles Manchester Hendry, 40, of Marion.

Smith County officials, who investigated the tragedy, said that Mitchell and his party, after spending the day here with Hendry, took off for Bluefield with the intention of having dinner there.

"He was flying low over the golf course," Dr. W. H. McCarty told Coroner E. A. Holmes and Commonwealth's Attorney Ralph Lincoln, "so low that I tried to yell that he would not make a high hill just ahead."

Dr. McCarty and other witnesses said that the pilot apparently thought he could safely fly over the hill until he almost reached it, when he "gave the plane the gun and it nosed almost straight upward."

The investigators were told that the ship's motor then appeared to stall and the plane hurtled nose first into the hillside.

Was Able Pilot.

The propeller struck first, imbedding itself in the ground. The ship bounced a short distance, the motor ripping through the fuselage. The plane was demolished, but it did not burn. Coroner Holmes said Mitchell had cut off the ignition.

The ship was a four-passenger cabin type constructed about ten years ago.

Mitchell was known as one of the ablest pilots in this region. He managed the Bristol Airport for several years prior to 1930, when he became the private pilot of Charles C. Lincoln, of Marion, a position he held for three years. The ship that crashed was the one he had piloted for Lincoln, Mitchell having purchased it from his former employer. After leaving Lincoln, Mitchell flew for an airline in South Carolina until about a year ago. Since then he had barnstormed, and on the last two week-ends had hauled passengers from the Marion field.

Two Die in Texas.

Bryan's Mill, Tex., Oct. 25 (AP).—Two aviators, tentatively identified as Capt. Edward N. Gibson and Capt. Charles Howard, were killed when an army bomber from Langley Field, Va., crashed and exploded near here today.

The plane crashed in a heavy rain in this wooded section about midway between Texarkana and Mount Pleasant, Tex. It left Langley Field yesterday to be turned over to the general headquarters air force at Dallas, Tex.

Officials at the Virginia field said the name of the officer-pilot in the plane with Gibson was not available tonight.

Pilot's Body Found.

The discovery ended a search which began last night after the 44-year-old veteran flier was reported missing.

L. C. Elliott, manager of the Fort Worth Air Navigation division, said he believed Ormsbee crashed on the Arbuckle Mountain range as he headed his ship downward through the murky sky in an attempt to land at Ardmore.

Body of Attorney Recovered in Bay

The body of Harold Ralph, 31, Bureau of Navigation attorney, who was drowned on October 18, with two of his colleagues when their sloop capsized in Chesapeake Bay, was recovered yesterday.

After J. Chase McKenzie, 36, 1515 Twentieth street northwest, swam to shore with news of the tragedy, Coast Guardsmen found the body of Edward Winkler, 28, of the Boulevard Apartments, wrapped in the sails of the capsized sloop. Friday the body of Glenn Warner, 28, also of the Boulevard, was recovered.

Ralph's body was found by the launch Navigation of the Bureau of Navigation a short distance from Kent Island off which the sloop turned over in a squall.

G. B. S., 'Doddering,' Declines Speech Bid

London, Oct. 26 (Jewish Telegraphic Agency).—George Bernard Shaw, declining tonight to address a memorial meeting Tuesday for Israel Zangwill, late Jewish author and playwright, remarked that he was "approaching a doddering, senile condition."

He explained his refusal of the invitation on the ground that "the meeting would inevitably end in a discussion of the Jewish question."

"I am no Jew," Shaw said, "and I don't see how I could be of any help if I were to make a speech. In any case I am too old to attend any more public meetings. I have had enough of them. I am approaching a doddering, senile condition and prefer to stay away."

20,000 Stage Catholic Rally At Monument

Hear Plea to Fight Against Indifference's Threat on Christianity.

Twenty thousands Washington Catholics joined in a celebration of the feast of Christ the King yesterday afternoon, and received a call to fight the "indifference" which the speaker said was threatening the foundation of Christianity.

The celebration reached its climax at a huge outdoor service on the Monument Grounds. There the throng participated in holy benediction, celebrated by Archbishop Michael J. Curley, of Baltimore, and heard Mgr. Joseph Corrigan, rector of Catholic University, sound a challenge to "form a bulwark against further inroads of that indifference in religious matters."

Preceding the service more than 6,000 persons, including members of Washington Holy Name Societies, which staged the demonstration, and delegations from Catholic parishes and orders throughout the city, marched in a long procession up Constitution avenue.

Archbishop Curley rode in a car at the head of the parade. With him were Mgr. Eugene J. Connelly, until recently spiritual director of the Holy Name Societies in the Capital, and the Rev. M. J. Riordan, oldest local Holy Name Society spiritual director in point of service.

In another car immediately following were the Rev. Justine McManus, and the Rev. Ignatius Smith, both members of the Dominican Order that founded the Holy Name organization. The Rev. Joseph M. Moran, present spiritual director of the Holy Name Union in Washington, and William M. Collins, president of the Union, walked at the head of the marching units.

Past presidents and other officers of the Washington society, who marched, included: P. J. Haltigan, Michael D. Schaeffer, Thomas K. Gallagher, John Hadley Doyle, Caesar Aiello, William Joseph Neale, John J. Curtin, Francis McCann, P. Frank Hannan and Leo A. Codd.

Six Societies Represented.

The 46 societies in the Capital were all represented in the line of march, in which also were a contingent of uniformed Metropolitan Police, in charge of Inspector Maurice Collins; members of the religious communities at Catholic University, parish delegations, the Knights of Columbus Band and the St. John's College cadets.

The parade marched from Sixth avenue up Constitution avenue to the Monument Grounds, where the marchers and thousands of others assembled at the Sylvan Theater. An altar had been erected there, and before it the holy service was conducted.

Archbishop Curley, in a brief ad-

Ex-Secretary Of Byrd Dies In Mystery

Belt Discovered Nearby; Hit-and-Run Theory Is Advanced.

Harvey E. Dameron, 49, former secretary to Senator Harry F. Byrd, of Virginia, was killed under mysterious circumstances early yesterday on the Washington Highway five miles north of Richmond.

Found unconscious at the side of the road, Dameron was taken to a Richmond hospital, where he died two hours later without regaining consciousness. His skull and nose were fractured and there were deep wounds in his abdomen.

"I am not at all satisfied this is a hit-and-run case," Larkin W. Glazebrook jr., special investigator for the State Motor Vehicles Division, said after a preliminary investigation.

"There are several angles that might prove this man met death in another manner."

Belt Found Nearby.

Dameron's belt, broken in the back, was found near a tree 15 feet from the spot where the body was found, Glazebrook pointed out. The wound across Dameron's abdomen was a clean cut, 10 inches long, and Glazebrook said he could not conceive how it could have been inflicted by an automobile.

Sheriff Sumpter Priddy, of Hanover County, appealed to the State police for aid in the investigation after it was reported the wounds in Dameron's abdomen had been inflicted with a knife.

State Officer H. C. Gatewood, who investigated the affair, said he believed the man was a hit-and-run victim and advanced the theory Dameron was hitch-hiking.

Dameron was last heard from early Friday night when he called his son, Paige E. Dameron, telling him he thought he might go to Washington. Hospital authorities said they found an unused airplane ticket in his pocket good from Richmond to Washington and about $1 in change.

Walk Unexplained.

His son was at a loss to explain why his father might be walking along the highway at night.

Officers said they could locate no filling station operators or other persons along the highway who had seen Dameron. A cane which he always used was found beside the body.

Dameron's wife, Mrs. Ida Dameron, 444 New Jersey avenue southeast, hurried to Richmond immediately after learning her husband had been injured, but arrived after his death.

Dameron came to Washington 20 years ago as secretary to former Representative William A. Jones, of Virginia. Later he served in the Treasury Department under Secretaries Glass and McAdoo.

When the Democrats reorganized the House in 1931, Dameron was appointed disbursing clerk in the office of the sergeant at arms. He held this position until March, 1933, when Senator Byrd came to Washington and selected him as his secretary.

Last August Dameron resigned as Senator Byrd's secretary and told friends he anticipated securing a better job in Richmond. He had been living in Richmond since the first of September.

Mr. and Mrs. Dameron, friends said, had been separated for some time.

Mrs. Simpson's Suit May Start Today

Ipswich, England, October 25 (AP). Mrs. Ernest "Wallie" Simpson's suit for divorce may begin late tomorrow instead of Tuesday, it became apparent tonight.

If Justice Sir John Anthony Hawke can rush through two criminal and two civil cases remaining on the assizes docket, the case of the Baltimore woman, King Edward's close friend, may begin late in the afternoon.

Her suit charging her husband with misconduct—the only ground for divorce in Britain—is the first on a list of six divorce cases.

Spanish Rebels Seize Washington Reporter

London, Oct. 25 (U.P.).—Henry T. Gorrell, of Washington, D. C., United Press staff correspondent in Spain, was captured by Spanish rebel forces during a battle near Illescas, it was revealed tonight.

Gen. Gonzalo Queipo de Llano, Spanish rebel general, broadcast that Gorrell was well treated when identified. Following loyalist troops attempting to recapture Illescas, 20 miles southwest of Madrid, Gorrell was taken when the attack failed and his chauffeur was forced to drive away and leave the correspondent lying in a ditch under machine-gun fire from two rebel tanks.

Meanwhile, James Minifie, a special war correspondent for the New York Herald Tribune, and Dennie Weaver, correspondent for the London News Chronicle, were reported missing. They left Madrid Sunday morning in a war ministry automobile, bound for the front, and have not been heard from since.

Plot for Revolt Laid to Russia By Portuguese

Copyright, 1936, by the United Press.

London, Oct. 25.—Portuguese charges that Soviet Russia is trying to instigate a red revolution in the little Fascist country and is attempting to foment a Spanish-Portuguese war were revealed tonight.

The charges were contained in a note—one of the most heated official communications in the history of diplomacy—delivered Saturday to the international committee for non-intervention in the Spanish civil war. It replied to Russian allegations that Portugal was aiding Spanish rebels.

The note charged further that the Soviet ambassador to Madrid, Marcel Rosenberg, dominates the Spanish government and himself called a secret gathering of Communists in Madrid at which Francisco Largo Caballero was chosen prime minister. The note alleged that Russian army officers are directing the present defense of Madrid.

"Agents Plotting."

Portugal's note, signed by Foreign Minister Armindo Monteiro, said that Soviet agents in Portugal were plotting to overthrow the government and that other bolshviks were sent to the Iberian Peninsula, charged with provoking a Spanish war against Portugal.

Insisting that "Russia's intervention" is prolonging the Spanish civil war, the note lists many alleged cases of Soviet aid to Spanish loyalists, ranging from "several dozens of Russian airmen at Getafe Airdrome" to "delivery of poison chemicals for poisoning food and water."

Poland to Bring Charges.

London, Oct. 25 (AP).—Poland will present charges tomorrow that both of the opposing groups on the International Committee for Non-intervention in Spain have shipped arms and airplanes to Spain, it was understood tonight.

The source of the allegations which Poland was expected to make was not specified. Hitherto Poland has played only a minor role in the neutrality negotiations, which have produced accusations and counter-accusations from Russia on the one side, sympathetic to the Madrid government, and Italy, Germany and Portugal on the other, friendly to the Spanish Fascists. Observers expressed the opinion the Polish declaration might serve to prevent a further breach between Europe's Communist and Fascist factions by causing further delays in any action by the neutrality group.

Battle Is Resumed.

Madrid, Oct. 25 (AP).—The Spanish government rushed heavy reinforcements to the Valdemora sector today as a terrific battle for possession of the Aranjuez highway and the Madrid-Levante rail communications was resumed.

Belgium Bars Fascist Rally; 800 Arrested

By the United Press.

Brussels, Oct. 25.—Belgium's youthful Fascist leader, Leon Degrelle, was in jail tonight, more than 800 followers were under arrest, and 78 persons were injured as the result of a day of rioting.

Only one person was shot, the victim of a clash between Rexists and Leftists, but 12 were injured so seriously as the police swung sabers and batons that they were hospitalized.

Police also arrested Degrelle's two lieutenants, four Rexist senators and seven Rexist deputies in a drive to crush the growing Fascist party, which held a giant demonstration here today.

Troops and gendarmes occupied strategic points in the city to prevent mob violence or even assemblies after the 30-year-old Rexist chief had made an impassioned attack on the government.

The Rexist leader, disciple and admirer of Adolf Hitler, had called his followers from all over Belgium for the demonstration.

The Fascists assembled early today in the place Ste. Gudule. Suddenly in the window of a private house, Degrelle appeared and began to exhort his followers. He attacked the Van Zeeland government.

Police struggled for hours to break up the meeting. They were unable to enter the house. Presently, however, Degrelle emerged voluntarily. He was taken into custody.

War Veterans Parade.

Meanwhile, war veterans, who compose a large part of Degrelle's followers, began a parade in the rain through virtually deserted streets. They were guarded by police and gendarmes to prevent a clash with Leftists.

"Rex will conquer," they shouted. "Vive le Roi!"

As dusk approached, the demonstrators still were thronging the streets in the central part of town.

Degrelle's political program has not been clearly delineated, but it is understood he hopes to establish a Fascist government, similar to that of Germany and Italy, under authority of the King.

Lock Haven, Pa., Oct. 25 (U.P.).—J. Leon Lazarowitz, former ruler of America's vast hobo kingdom, revealed to a tense and waiting Nation tonight the results of his Nation-wide hobo straw vote on the Presidential election.

President Roosevelt finished first in the poll with 117,697 votes to 30,401 for Gov. Alf M. Landon.

Smoking a big cigar, half of which, Lazarowitz admitted, had been enjoyed by a previous owner, he said the results were the wishes of America's 239,387 transients who wrote their ballots on box cars, bridges and passed them along from hand to hand.

"Me and my followers have their fingers on the pulse of the Nation," Lazarowitz said. "What other vote could be more representative of a Nation's wishes than the opinion of the thousands of men who make their beds in every town and hamlet in the country."

Mrs. Isaac Digges, Daughter of Glass, To Support Landon

New York, Oct. 25.—Mrs. Isaac Watlington Digges, 56, of Bedford, N. Y., younger daughter of Senator Carter Glass, of Virginia, today came out for Gov. Alf M. Landon, Republican candidate for President.

Mrs. Digges accepted an invitation from the Republican National Committee to sit on the platform when Gov. Landon makes his final New York speech at Madison Square Garden Thursday.

"I most assuredly shall vote for Gov. Landon," Mrs. Digges said. "Otherwise I should not have accepted the invitation so graciously extended. I am voting for a Republican for the first time in my life and, in doing so, I feel that I am rendering a service to all that I hold dear and sacred in the traditions of the Democratic Party. My party means to me honesty and integrity in high places, and respect for pledges solemnly made to the electorate, the preservation of American independence and initiative, and the curtailment of the overweening arrogance of a growing bureaucracy. The Democratic platform promises these things; the anti-Democrats of the New Deal have destroyed them. The future welfare of the Democratic Party demands that leaders who have not kept faith with their pledges should be forever removed from the American political scene. Gov. Landon, as an American, has the capacity and innate integrity to bring us back to our senses—and to start us again on the American trail."

Mr. Digges is a New York attorney.

Roosevelt Son Quotes Kansan As 'Proof' of School Charges

Cites Letter He Says Superintendent Markham Sent Senator Gill, Declaring Legislation Was Not Favorable to State Program.

By the Associated Press.

Boston, Oct. 25.—James Roosevelt, son of the President, tonight said the State of Kansas, of which Alf M. Landon, Republican candidate for President, is Governor, "has allowed a system to exist which appears to deny the opportunity for real education to . . . many children."

Roosevelt, prior to a radio appearance in which he made his charge, said he would "absolutely prove" previous utterances regarding the Kansas school system.

Landon, on Friday, said a member of the President's "immediate family" had made "utterly untrue" and "malicious" charges against his State's school system.

Roosevelt quoted as authority for his assertions W. T. Markham, State superintendent for public instruction for the State of Kansas.

He said Markham, in a letter to United States Senator George McGill (Democrat), of Kansas, last February 27, declared: "There were 444 school districts in Kansas that made provisions for sending their pupils to other districts and did not open school at all.

"Legislation in Kansas," he quoted Markham further as telling McGill, "has not been favorable to a school program for a number of years. * * * However, it seems almost impossible to interest those in authority in the needs of educational opportunity for boys and girls."

On May 10, 1935, Roosevelt assert-

Existing delays in criminal cases must be eliminated if the public is to win its fight against the law offender, James M. Hepbron, acting director of the Washington Criminal Justice Association, declared in a radio talk yesterday.

Naming public opinion a principal weapon in this fight, he advocated city-wide support of his organization, which proposes to follow up arrests with information leading to speedy disposal of the case.

"We all know what delays in prosecuting a case mean—they mean, in too many cases, dismissal," said Hepbron, who has been managing director of the Criminal Justice Commission in Baltimore for the last 13 years.

More Time for Defense.

"Every delay gives the arrested man, his relatives and his lawyer, more time in which to work—and don't think they don't work," the crime expert added, "in the end it means the case is tried, not on the facts of the case, but on emotions."

It is not enough, Hepbron said, to keep a record of those arrested "unless we know the proportion of arrests in relation to the volume of crime." Nor is it of any particular benefit to know how many are convicted without knowing the relation which the number of convictions bears to the number of arrests and the extent of the crime.

There should be some agency, Hepbron said, to gather all the data kept by the police, the grand jury, the district attorney and the criminal courts. There should be some system of files giving complete history of the case. It should be made known just how many

Train Deaths of 60 Blamed on Officer

Hongkong, Oct. 25 (AP).—Chinese reports received tonight blamed a military officer for the worst railway disaster in China in recent years, in which at least 60 persons, including 53 soldiers, were killed.

Four runaway coaches on the newly opened Canton-Hankow Railway dashed down a steep hill and collided with a train climbing the grade October 22, said delayed dispatches from Tengchatang, Hunan Province, in China's interior.

Chinese reports said a military officer aboard the train forced the engineer to start the climb despite warnings the four cars stalled on the track above might be jarred loose.

The officer was reported to have fled after the disaster.

By the Associated Press.

Tampa, Fla., Oct. 25.—A band of men whose leaders wore American Legion caps slugged their way to a flag-draped stand in a lot where Earl Browder, Communist Presidential candidate, was starting an address today and broke up the meeting.

A dozen persons, including two women, were injured slightly by blows from the raiders' fists and a pistol used as a club by Constable Fred Newberger.

The wooden scaffold which served as a rostrum was upset during the fighting, but Browder and the others who occupied it were not hurt.

Charges Collusion.

"It is clear," he commented afterward, "that mobs in Tampa are working in collusion with the police to deny freedom of speech. Under those circumstances I will not attempt to speak here."

Browder came here last September 13 to deliver an address, but the hall he expected to use was padlocked.

The leader of the men who broke up today's meeting and his associates had been standing by the side of the lot, in downtown Tampa, for a full half-hour before the speaking started. They went into action as Alfred Bell, State secretary of the Communist Party, introduced the Presidential candidate.

"Come on, boys," the leader called, and the men surged toward the speakers' stand, where three American flags flew in the breeze. A chorus of boos arose from the crowd of about 200.

As the group fought its way to the stand, Browder started to speak, disregarding the commotion. There was a flurry of fists until those on the platform urged the spectators to be quiet.

"Don't hit back, don't hit back," they called. This brought a lull for a few minutes and gave Browder a chance to suggest that "those who disagree with us might listen to what we have to say, and afterward voice their own opinions."

The group then started to mount the stand, fighting off several men who blocked the steps. The stand teetered precariously.

"Take it easy on the flag, boys," the leader called, pointing to the large flag behind the stand and two more on each side of the amplifier. "Don't let the flag touch the ground."

The crowd took up the cry. The U. S. Army Riders Are Victors In Military Team Competition

By Bill McCormick.

In a spectacular finish over the most difficult jump course ever erected in these parts, the United States Army horse show team yesterday won the international military team jumping contest as the four-day Inter-American Horse Show came to a rousing finish at the Meadowbrook course.

A better than capacity crowd of 6,500—the largest ever assembled for a show in this territory—watched the United States riders and men attack the 16 formidable jumps in well-nigh perfect form to score a total of 31¼ faults, which boosted their grand total for the three days in which the team jumping was contested, to 61¼.

The Chileans, who led the first day and fell back only 8 points yesterday, wound up in a blaze of glory, still riding furiously even after all hope of catching the front-ranking United States cavalrymen had been dissipated by a splendid performance by Maj. J. T. Cole, on Dakota.

Despite a four-fault ride by Capt. Eduardo Yanez, on his favorite mount, Toqui, the Chileans made as many as 40 faults during the afternoon, to wind up with an aggregate score of 78 faults.

The Mexican riders and mounts, who faltered badly in the first two days of the competition, seemed to have found their "sea legs" and wound up the day with only 32¼

Governor Will Stop Here Today Prior to Talk at Baltimore.

By Felix Bruner.

Both President Roosevelt and Gov. Alf M. Landon prepared yesterday for their final campaign drives, simultaneous attempts to capture the votes of the country's two most populous States, New York and Pennsylvania.

Gov. Landon was speeding eastward from Indianapolis last night toward Washington, where he will make a brief stop at an outlying railroad station before proceeding to Baltimore for a short rear-platform speech. The Landon train will stop at 9:30 a. m. at the Langdon Station of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, Twenty-fourth and Douglas streets northeast. A party of Washington Republicans will board the train and accompany the candidate to Baltimore.

A doctor traveled with Landon as he took his campaign to the Atlantic seaboard, the Associated Press reported. Dr. L. B. Spake, of Kansas City, Kans., was summoned to accompany the Governor, still suffering from a head cold, and keeping his throat in the best possible condition for the final week of campaigning.

The Kansas Governor will proceed into Pennsylvania immediately after his Baltimore talk. He will speak tonight at Philadelphia in the hall where President Roosevelt was renominated. Tomorrow night he will talk at Pittsburgh, after which he will return eastward for a speech at New York Thursday night.

President Goes to Church.

President Roosevelt spent most of the day in the White House preparing for the campaign windup. During the morning he attended services at St. Thomas' Episcopal Church. The President will make ten speeches in eight days in Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Delaware and New York.

The President today will dedicate a chemistry building at Howard University, erected with WPA funds. Tomorrow night he will leave by train for Bayonne, N. J., from where he will proceed by boat to Bedloe's Island in New York harbor, where he will speak at the ceremonies marking the fiftieth anniversary of the Statue of Liberty. On Thursday the President will speak at Wilkes-Barre and Harrisburg, Pa.; Camden, N. J., and Wilmington, Del.

The President's schedule calls for his return to Washington Thursday and for a speech at Brooklyn Friday night and in Madison Square Garden, New York, Saturday night.

Faculty Support.

The Associated Press reported from the Landon train that the Kansas Governor had received a letter from 14 members of the faculty of the University of Chicago pledging their support. The letter said:

"Because of the widespread newspaper publicity given to the political utterances of a few members of the University of Chicago's faculty, we have been told that many people hold the erroneous impression that these utterances represent the political viewpoint of the University of Chicago and its faculty.

"The University of Chicago is a nonpolitical institution. Each member of the faculty has the right to complete expression of his own political views. No member of the faculty has any authority to act as representative of the views of the faculty generally or of the university.

"Illustrative of the right of complete political freedom, we, the undersigned, wish publicly to announce that we shall vote for Gov. Alf M. Landon for President of the United States on November 3."

Governor Replies.

Gov. Landon replied to the faculty members:

"It is with the sense of deep gratification that I have received the statement of indorsement signed by the 14 professors from the University of Chicago. All of us have known for many years of the outstanding work of a number of these men.

"They have made some of the greatest contributions of our generation to modern civilization. I was particularly interested to note

Part-Time Lanham Judge Rules Out Campaign By Jehovah's Witnesses Against School Oaths

The booming voice of Judge Joseph F. Rutherford, titular head of Jehovah's Witnesses, was stilled in Maryland's Twentieth Election District yesterday when Justice of the Peace Louis Gundling slammed shut his volume of general laws of the Free State and handed down a decision in plain and unmistakable language.

Judge Gundling, who on weekdays serves as sergeant of the guard at Tugwelltown, reached for his volume of general laws when the Defense highway town of Lanham was disturbed by a recording of Judge Rutherford's voice saying:

"The flag representatively stands for visible ruling powers. To attempt by law to compel a citizen or the child of a citizen to salute any object or thing, or to sing so-called patriotic songs is entirely unfair and wrong."

"That truck is back again," muttered Judge Gundling as he left his home, recalling that on Saturday afternoon he had warned Ernest R. Vanice, 228 Madison street northwest, one of Jehovah's Witnesses, to stay out of his district with a sound truck.

Judge Gundling found the truck parked on the property of Mrs. Howard Edgerton, another of Jehovah's Witnesses. Gundling returned to his home only to grab his law book a short time later and race off to Seabrook, 4 miles away, when a messenger brought word that Vanice was broadcasting in front of the school there.

Vanice shut off the recording when Judge Gundling arrived and announced County Police Chief J. J. Crowley had informed him there was no law to prevent operation of his sound truck.

Gundling thumbed through his book and quoted Article 27, Section B, governing respect to the flag.

"It is unlawful to publicly mutilate, deface, defoul, defy, trample upon or by word or act cast contempt upon any such flag, standard, ensign or shield," Gundling read impressively.

Unimpressed, Vanice suggested that Gundling arrest him and make a test case.

It was then Gundling shoved the law back into his picket. He said:

Without further ado, Vanice drove off to broadcast at Bowie, Glen Dale, Cheverly and Landover, all without the Twentieth District and Judge Gundling's jurisdiction.

The sound truck expedition, Vanice explained, is the beginning of a protest campaign against the expulsion of the six children of August Ludke, of Oxon Hill, from school because they would not salute the Flag. Jehovah's witnesses plan to distribute 30,000 copies of "The Golden Age," written by Judge Rutherford, in Prince Georges County, Vanice said.

Court's Plans On Labor Rule Is Likely Today

30 Appeals Will Be Heard Before Adjournment Until Nov. 9.

By the Associated Press.

Government officials and labor leaders expressed belief last night that the Supreme Court would say today whether it would pass upon constitutionality of the Wagner labor relations act.

That was the principal announcement awaited from the nine justices when they convene at noon to dispose of approximately 30 appeals before adjourning for two weeks. During that time they will prepare opinions for delivery November 9.

Included in the list was a petition by Illinois Communists for quick action on their application to compel State officials to place the names of the party candidates for President and Vice President on the ballot for the November 3 election.

Plans Would Be Changed.

A change of the court's plans would be necessary to hear arguments on the petition before November 9, six days after the election. Even if it would take that extraordinary action, a few weeks usually are required to prepare an opinion after arguments are heard.

Litigation challenging the Wagner act, designed to guarantee collective bargaining to labor and establish a national labor relations board to settle industrial disputes, was filed by the Associated Press and by the Washington, Virginia and Maryland Coach Co. The Government urged the high court to grant a review.

A. P. Appeals Ruling.

The Associated Press appealed from a ruling by the Circuit Court of Appeals at New York sustaining an order of the labor board directing the reinstatement of Morris Watson, a discharged employe of the New York office. In the coach company case, the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals upheld the act and ordered the reinstatement of 18 employes who had been discharged.

Other disputes involving the act are before the court, but no announcement on them is expected before November 9. They affect the Jones and Laughlin Steel Corporation of Pittsburgh, the Friedman-Harry Marks Clothing Co., Inc., of New York, and the Fruehauf Trailer Co., of Canton, Ohio.

If a ruling on the statute is promised, arguments will be heard in a few weeks followed by a final decision. If a review is denied, the decision of the lower courts will stand.

Coast Unions Voting On Maritime Walkout

San Francisco, Oct. 25 (AP).—The question of another maritime strike on the Pacific Coast hinged tonight on the outcome of union voting on a walkout referendum.

Union leaders said results of the strike vote probably will be posted tomorrow. The ballots, distributed to about 37,000 waterfront workers, proposed they authorize a coastwise walkout on or after Wednesday in the event shipowners fail to meet the union's "minimum" demands in the meantime.

French Planes Will Aid In Madrid Evacuation

Paris, Oct. 25 (AP).—Three French transport planes were made ready tonight to take off from Toulouse for Madrid to evacuate women and children refuged in embassies there.

The machines will leave Toulouse at 7 a.m. tomorrow on their first trip and probably will make two journeys daily until all the refugees are brought out.

Each plane is expected to carry more than 15 passengers on each trip, thus removing about 100 persons each day.

Blum Denounces Idea Of a French Dictator

Narbonne, Oct. 25 (AP).—Premier Leon Blum scorned the idea that France might be in danger of departing from the ranks of democratic countries in an address here today following new assurances that his Popular Front government would hold together.

In an atmosphere charted with reports that extreme Rightists were preparing an armed coup, the premier issued a challenge to "enemies of democratic institutions." Public opinion, he declared, never would tolerate dictatorship in France.

Conception Students Plan Breakfast Party

A Communion breakfast at Sholl's G street restaurant this morning will open the 1936-37 season of the Immaculate Conception Social Club. The group will attend 8:15 mass.

Short talks and a discussion of the season's plans will feature the gathering. The Rev. Joseph Gehdra is spiritual adviser of the club.

Husband Housekeeper Sues for Maintenance

Los Angeles, Oct. 25 (AP).—A housekeeping husband, who minded the three children and cooked while the wife worked, asked separate maintenance in a divorce cross complaint on file here today.

Mrs. Helen E. Hoyt Wheat, a school teacher, filed suit for divorce some time ago, charging cruelty. Harry E. Wheat, the housekeeper, filed a cross-complaint asking $60 monthly for the children and $40 for himself.

For the last year and a half poor health kept him home, where he undertook domestic duties, Wheat said. Lately, however, his complaint said, Mrs. Wheat criticized his cooking and his housework, and refused to take him to places of amusement. Often, he charged, she became angry because he had not darned nor sewed her clothes and the children's.

Politics and People

By Franklyn Waltman

NONE too soon for most of us, the final week of the Presidential campaign has arrived with President Roosevelt and Gov. Alf M. Landon engaging in a desperate and virtually face-to-face struggle to carry the two most populous States in the Union, New York and Pennsylvania.

WALTMAN.

This final week of the campaign might well be the most crucial in the entire fight, for the 83 electoral votes of these two States represent 31 per cent, or almost one-third, of the 266 electoral votes necessary to the victorious Presidential candidate—and admittedly it is nip and tuck between the two major candidates in each of these States.

Indeed, on what happens in New York and Pennsylvania on election day may depend the final result. President Roosevelt conceivably could win without the help of New York and Pennsylvania. Woodrow Wilson did in 1916, but by a margin which was uncomfortably close, the closest, in fact in any Presidential election since 1888.

But it is difficult to see how Gov. Landon could obtain the necessary electoral majority without carrying either New York and Pennsylvania or both, for President Roosevelt enjoys the same strength that put Wilson across 20 years ago—widespread support in the agrarian States and on the Pacific Coast. Consequently the New York and Pennsylvania vote may be the crucial question of the election.

Normally Pennsylvania would be conceded to the Republican Presidential candidate without argument. Many observers now are convinced that it may be placed safely in the Landon column, just as it was one of the few States carried by Herbert Hoover in 1932.

But in 1934 Pennsylvania elected a Democratic Governor and sent a Democrat to the Senate. The victory of that year is the chief reason why the Democrats believe Mr. Roosevelt may carry the State this year. Another reason is the support of the President by John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers, and other labor leaders. The vote of miners in Pennsylvania is a substantial factor.

There is another reason why the Democrats feel so cocky about Pennsylvania this year—one which is not mentioned in the speeches. They believe that with a Democratic State government they will get this year what they call "an honest count" of the ballots. Many of them believe that actually Mr. Roosevelt carried the State four years ago, but that the Republican officials could not count very well.

This year, they point out, their "own boys" will be in charge of the ballot boxes. It is a decided advantage. But whether it is sufficient to turn the Republican stronghold of Pennsylvania into a Democratic State in a Presidential election remains to be seen. Gov. George H. Earle, Democrat, won two years ago only by a margin of 66,000 votes out of approximately 2,900,000 cast—and it is obvious that the New Deal has lost prestige since the 1934 election.

The New York situation is somewhat different. In that State the Democrats have been in power constantly since 1922—but the State in the last three Presidential elections twice has given its electoral vote to the Republican nominee.

Mr. Roosevelt carried New York, his native State, four years ago and in the 1934 State election the Democratic sweep was the greatest in history. But a year later it became evident that the tide had turned back toward the Republicans.

The question is whether the drift back to the Republicans has been sufficiently strong and has reached such proportion as to overcome the huge gains made by the Democrats. With a large part of New York City in the grip of a Democratic political machine, it is a question, first, of the loyalty of this machine to Mr. Roosevelt, and, secondly, of the size of the Republican following in upstate New York. Answers to neither question are not found easily.

Reports are frequent that Tammany Hall will "break no legs" for Mr. Roosevelt on election day, which is to say that the organization, while loyal on the surface, will be, on the whole, unenthusiastic in getting out the vote and performing such little tricks as voting deceased brethren and fictitious names. But of course it is impossible to confirm such reports until the election result is known.

Stories also are current that upstate New York will give Gov. Landon the largest vote that section has given to a Republican in many political moons and that this vote will give him a majority of at least 750,000 votes outside of New York City. If that happens and if Tammany "breaks no legs," then Mr. Landon's prospects for carrying the State look good—but if Tammany goes in for what is euphemistically called "leg breaking" and piles up a Roosevelt majority of three-quarters to a million votes in the city, his chances appear slim, indeed. Each State today appears to be an even money bet.

* * *

A story cropped up in New York City last week that Josef Stalin, the Russian dictator, plans to visit this country shortly after his election for reasons of his health. Moscow denied it. If Gov. Landon is elected, however, we confidently expect to hear that President Roosevelt cabled Stalin the message which Al Smith on the night of his defeat was said to have sent the Pope: "Unpack."

Dr. Townsend Backs Landon In N. Y. Voting

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Oct. 25.—Dr. Francis E. Townsend urged his followers in a statement today to "get actively behind" Gov. Alf M. Landon in New York and 13 other States in which William Lemke, Union party candidate for President, is not on the ballot.

Dr. Townsend supplemented a general statement with one directed to leaders of Townsend national recovery-old age pension groups in New York State.

"As Lemke has been ruled off the New York ballot," he said, "I strongly urge all Townsendites in New York State to get actively behind Landon. This is the only course for us to follow."

Repeats His Plea.

Dr. Townsend repeated his plea that his followers support Lemke in States where the North Dakota Representative is on the ballot and said he saw a chance to throw the election into the House of Representatives.

"I hope," he said, "with the millions who indorse the national recovery plan bearing my name, that, despite the fact that Mr. Lemke is not on the ballot in 14 States, we still have an apportunity, if we fight to see that every vote counts, of throwing the Presidential election into the House of Representatives."

Repeatedly asserting that "Roosevelt must be defeated," the elderly Californian said he was confident voters in New York and Vermont "will appreciate why Roosevelt must be defeated."

Urges Roosevelt Defeat.

"I feel," he said, "that if Mr. Roosevelt is defeated the efforts of our organization the last two years will not have been in vain."

Dr. Townsend ranked Arkansas, Vermont, Louisiana and Mississippi behind New York in importance among States in which Lemke will not be on the ballot. Others were West Virginia, California, Florida, Kansas, Maryland, Nevada, New Jersey, North Carolina and Oklahoma.

"If we are to have our national recovery plan in effect before the next Presidential campaign," the statement said, "Roosevelt must be defeated. Mr. Lemke is 100 per cent for the Townsend plan. However, where Mr. Lemke is not on the ballot, we must choose the lesser of two evils. Therefore, I urge in those States a vote for Mr. Landon."

cases, begun with an arrest, reach a verdict.

Not Detective Agency.

Inspector L. I. H. Edwards, of Metrotpolitan Police, who participated in the radio round-table broadcast by Station WOL, asked Hepbron if the association planned to operate as a "superdetective agency." Hebron replied it would not.

"Ours is not a head-hunting organization, it is entirely fact finding," he said. He added that the Baltimore Criminal Justice Commission, after which the Washington association is patterned, has maintained since 1923 a complete set of records of felonies, or serious crimes only, from which the situation in Baltimore can be studied.

Complete Picture.

"From such a record it is possible to get a complete picture of the entire situation: First, by knowing how many serious crimes are reported and what proportion of these reported crimes are solved by arrest and conviction, how many of those arrested were dismissed by the magistrates or handled in the juvenile court, how many were dismissed by the grand jury or whose cases were 'stetted' by the district attorney, and the number of convictions and acquittals, together with the percentage of cases in which probation was granted."

Hepbron emphasized that the Criminal Justice Association would not supercede any existing crime agency. He said it would co-operate with them, and make every effort to coo-rdinate their activities.

Vessel Leaves Course, Grounds Near Bermuda

Bermuda, Oct. 25 (U.P.).—The S. S. Cristobal Colon, whose master unwittingly left his course, piled up on treacherous reefs near here at 1 a. m. today. Tugs were sent to her aid. She carried no passengers.

The little vessel, of 283 tons, is owned by the Transatlantica Line and carries a crew of 160. It was piled high on the rocks and, it was understood, was badly damaged. Tugs sent to the rescue have been unable, so far, to dislodge the ship.

the indorsement of Dr. Dick. I have greatly admired the work he has been doing to save the children of America from the ravages of scarlet fever.

Fund Request Revealed.

Meanwhile, Harry L. Hopkins, Works Progress Administrator, revealed that on January 5, 1935, Landon had asked the Emergency Relief Administration for $150,000 to prevent the closing of rural schools in Kansas. Hopkins said he replied with a suggestion to Landon that the State's Legislature appropriate the money.

Previous to the Landon request, Hopkins said, John Stutz, head of the Kansas relief administration, had telegraphed that "several rural schools in this State unable to open account lack of funds due to poor tax collections. Several other schools can operate only one and two months."

The Republican National Committee in a statement declared that President Roosevelt had made "deceptive statements as to taxes" in his speech at Worcester, Mass.

Statements Disputed.

The committee said the President "used figures is presenting his tax ideas which are utterly at variance from those formally given out by the Treasury and Commerce Departments."

It continued:

"At Worcester, Mr. Roosevelt said—'In 1933 when we came into office 58 cents out of every dollar of Federal revenue came from hidden taxes.'

"Careful search of Treasury figures reveals that in the opinion of Secretary Morgenthau's bright young men, who compile the reports as made public, in 1932 only 41 cents came from hidden taxes. This would seem to be something of an error.

"Mr. Roosevelt continued in his Worcester speech—'Leaving out of account the liquor tax—for liquor was illegal in 1933—we have reduced these indirect taxes to 38 cents of our every dollar.'

"Mr. Roosevelt's official department reports show, on analysis, that at this present moment 51 cents out of every dollar collected by the Federal Government comes from hidden taxes."

LeGore to Join Group.

Harry LeGore, Republican candidate for Representative from the Sixth Maryland Cangressional Disetrict, has been invited to join the group on Landon's train when it arrives in Cumberland, Md., this morning en route to Baltimore, the Landon-LeGore Club of Montgomery County announced yesterday.

Montgomery County Republican leaders will board a special car on the train when it arrives at Twenty-fourth and Douglas strets northeast and will accompany the Republican candidate on the remainder of his trip to Baltimore.

Those who will board the train here are Earl W. Shinn, president of the Landon-LeGore Club; Walter Dawson, chairman of the Republican State Central Committee for the county; Paul Sleman, former chairman of the county committee and Wilson L. Townsend, James Cunningham Rogers, Mrs. C. W. Mitchel and Robert L. McKeever, all members of the Landon-LeGore Club executive committee.

G. O. P. Rallied Here.

Republican leaders in the District swung into action at top speed yesterday after learning that Gov. Landon's campaign train would stop at Twenty-fourth and Douglas streets northeast.

Over the radio, in motion picture theaters and by telephone and telegrams the local G. O. P. whips called on Republicans to turn out to greet their candidate.

Among those who will board the train will be Edward F. Colladay, national committeeman for the District; Mrs. Virginia White Speel, national committeewoman; James C. Wilkes, chairman of the State central committee; Clyde D. Garrett, secretary; Edgar C. Snyder, treasurer; Paul E. Lash, president of the Landon-Knox Campaign Club; Miss Mildred Reeves, secretary; Ord Preston, treasurer; former Ambassador Alanson B. Houghton, Mrs. Ruth Colladay, president of the Young Republican Women; Edward E. Colladay, Mr. and Mrs. Cooper Rhodes, Mrs. George Hart, Mrs. Bruce Hoffson, Dr. Camp Stanley, Mrs. Isabelle Lee Frye, Francis Wells, J. Franklin Wilson and Judge James A. Cobb.

A delegation of Baltimore Republicans also will board the train here.

The Campaign Arena

By the Associated Press.

New York, Oct. 25.—Alfred E. Smith, Democratic candidate for President in 1928, returned home tonight from a 2,000-mile campaign trip through the Middle West, expressing himself confident that Democrats dissatisfied with the New Deal will register an effective protest on election day.

He will make his fifth and final speech at Albany, N. Y., on October 31, the night President Roosevelt speaks at Madison Square Garden in New York.

In Chicago he intimated he might have something to say in his Albany speech about whether he would vote for Gov. Herbert H. Lehman, who started in politics at his suggestion, or William F. Bleakley, the Republican candidate for Governor.

Smith is scheduled to meet Landon for the first time Wednesday night, when the Kansas Governor arrives in New York for his Madison Square Garden speech on Thursday night. Smith's associates said he would not attend the Landon rally.

* * *

New York, Oct. 25 (AP).—A Presidential suite in the Murray Hill Hotel, in the shadow of Grand Central Terminal, will be Gov. Alfred M. Landon's headquarters during his New York stay next Wednesday and Thursday.

He will occupy the parlor, bedroom and bath on the second floor which Grover Cleveland and William McKinley reserved when they were Presidents.

John Hipple, who has been clerk at the hotel for 48 years, will hand him the keys just as he used to hand them to Cleveland and McKinley.

An automobile escort will speed the Republican candidate and his party to the hotel from Pennsylvania Station.

A brief reception, dinner with Miss Marion Cahill, the nurse who cared for his infant daughter Peggy Anne; and a conference with Alfred E. Smith and Republican leaders will fill his first day here, according to the schedule mapped out for him.

Thursday morning he is to visit Mrs. Theodore Roosevelt, sr., at her home in Oyster Bay; return to Brooklyn for a luncheon meeting; and then rest for the rally Thursday night in Madison Square Garden.

* * * *

Emil Rieve, president of the American Federation of Hosiery Workers, yesterday asked Gov. Alf M. Landon to make a speech on matters pertaining to conditions of employment which Rieve charged now exist.

Rieve said the Republican Presidential nominee had attempted "to point out to American labor the error of its ways," but had "neglected to advise the American employers, who are supporting you what you believe they should do."

* * * *

New York, Oct. 25.—Former President Herbert Hoover left for his California home today with the terse comment that "the Republicans are very hopeful of carrying the State."

He departed for Chicago, where he will put finishing touches to a campaign speech he will deliver at Denver Friday night.

From Denver Mr. Hoover will leave over the week-end for Palo Alto, and is expected to make a few brief speeches in that vicinity before casting his vote election day.

"Things are going very well," Mr. Hoover said regarding progress of the Republican campaign.

"Mr. Hoover has had many invitations to talk in California, but he can't say which ones he will accept," said Lawrence Richey, the former President's secretary and only traveling companion.

It is likely he will talk at Palo Alto and neighboring cities," Richey added.

* * * *

New York, Oct. 25 (AP).—Estelle M. Sternberger, pacifist and executive director of World Peaceways, Inc., today said Alfred M. Landon was a foe of legislation guaranteeing American neutrality.

Attacking the foreign policy address given Saturday by the Republican Presidential candidate, she said he "virtually indicated he would insist on trafficking in munitions with belligerents."

* * * *

Jersey City, N. J., Oct. 25 (AP).—Mayor Frank Hague, floor manager for Al Smith at the 1932 Democratic National Convention, in his first major political address of the campaign today assailed what he termed "disgruntled Democrats who go around the country begging and pleading with loyal Democrats to destroy the party and vote Republican."

Addressing a rally under the auspices of the United Polish-American Democratic Clubs here, the vice chairman of the Democratic National Committee called for "party loyalty."

Roosevelt's Son Quotes Kansan In School Row

ed, Markham said in a radio address: "It is a lametnable fact that 458 schools had to be closed the past year, many teachers going without pay. There were 8,557 boys and girls who did not have the privilege of completing a full year. * * *"

51 Without Funds.

Last Tuesday, Roosevelt added, Markham made a public statement saying "* * * There are 51 rural schools in operation today with no funds whatever at their disposal."

"May I emphasize," Roosevelt declared, "that while it may be true that Kansas stands high in the matter of literacy, a matter for which they should be justly proud, there is a vast difference between the boy and girl who is educated and the boy and girl who escapes illiteracy simply by being able to read and write.

"The complaint of all intelligent people must be that, in the State of Kansas, the present State administration has allowed a system to exist which appears to deny the opportunity for real education to so many children."

Roosevelt asserted that on February 17, 1935, the Topeka Daily Capital, "the newspaper of the Republican Senator, Arthur Capper," said editorially: "The unfortunate truth is that our salaries (of teachers) compare unfavorably with those of all our neighbors."

McAndrew was quoted as saying: "I cannot pump up my enthusiasm for anything that the Republican candidate has done for education in his own State of Kansas. He has been the principal factor in keeping the school system at a low standard * * *"

School Costs Slashed.

Roosevelt quoted from a message he said Landon sent to the Kansas Legislature in 1935: "During the past three or four years it has been necessary to conduct our schools at lower costs than in the past in order to meet changed and changing conditions * * * and it is significant that during the past three years school costs for Kansas have been reduced approximately 40 per cent."

In conclusion, Roosevelt asserted: "This criticism can be placed squarely upon the political leaders of Kansas, including its Governor, who, having knowledge of these facts, have failed to act.

"I have endeavored to confine myself strictly to the fact.

"I do not believe * * * that the citizens of this State will subscribe to the educational practices of Gov. Landon on November 3."

Brother, Ousted Here, Arrives to Aid Franco

Lisbon, Portugal, Oct. 25 (AP).—Maj. Ramon Franco, former air attache to the Spanish Embassy in Washington, arrived here today en route to Spain to join his brother, the Rebel Commander Francisco Franco.

Dismissed from his post by the Madrid Socialist government because of his relationship to the insurgent leader, Franco announced before his departure from Washington that he was ready to join the rebels.

Cuban Troops Rescue Boy From Kidnapers

The youth, Emilio Ybargollin, was seized yesterday and held under threat of death unless his father paid $2,500.

The soldiers surrounded the camp of the armed kidnapers near Trinidad today. It was not immediately known whether other casualties occurred in the engagement.

Ford Allowed to Speak.

Durham, N. C., Oct. 25 (U.P.).—A threatened demonstration against an address by James Ford, colored Communist Vice Presidential nominee, in the Durham County courthouse failed to materialize here tonight after Communist sympathizers called in county officers for protection.

After delaying his speech nearly an hour while Paul Crouch, North Carolina Communist gubernatorial nominee, obtained a detail of sheriff's deputies to preserve order, Ford finished talking shortly before 9:30 p. m.

The delay resulted when a man walked into the courtroom a few minutes before the scheduled time for Ford's address, 7:30 p. m.—and shouted:

Mrs. Davies Only Capital Leader in List Given by Magazine.

Of the 23 richest women in the United States, the capital can boast of only one as its own. She is Mrs. Joseph E. Davies, divorced wife of Edward F. Hutton, who moved here a year ago to marry Mr. Davies, prominent attorney, formerly chairman of the Federal Trade Commission.

Mrs. Davies, like most of the wealthy women in the country, inherited her fortune. All together, these 23 are estimated to hold billions of dollars worth of wealth, none of which they earned.

They constitute a matriarchy much more potent than any Wall Street or industrial oligarchy, according to an article appearing today in Fortune magazine.

An intimate study of the 23 shows further that 8 are young, 11 middle-aged and 4 elderly. They avoid "society" life for the most part.

(Critics of the article pointed out that most of America's great oil, lumber, steel, railroad, banking, metal and utilities fortunes are not mentioned in the list, which supposedly represents "70 per cent of the Nation's wealth.")

At Least $25,000,000.

No American woman qualified for recognition who did not own at least $25,000,000, which explains the absence of several Washington women of great wealth who did not attain mention.

American men smooth the paths to their own graves working overtime to comply with the unwritten law they "must provide for their wives' welfare," authors of the article conclude. It later becomes a point of vanity to men that they leave their womenfolk well-off. "The strain of maintaining one's wife on a proper scale,' 'they say, "makes it tacitly understood that she will outlive him." Statistics show that American men have a shorter life expectancy than their women.

While Mrs. Davies' case is typical in some respects, it is not typical of the majority. She inherited her money from her father, being the only child of the late Charles William Post, who made his fortune from the cereal business. She carries on three separate and extremely active careers, the article says—business, philanthropy and social life.

Mrs. Davies is the first woman to sit as a director on the board of the company founded by her father. In the sphere of philanthropy she has been decorated for financing a base hospital during the war and she has acted on a relief committee which founded a food dispensary feeding more than 700 persons a day in New York.

Countess' Her Niece.

Her niece is the former Barbara Hutton, now the Countess Haugwitz-Reventlow. "Barbara Hutton Mdivani Haugwitz-Reventlow," says the article, "is the sure-fire sensation of the tabloid, glamour girl of the rotogravures, and American whom two foreign marriages have converted into a foreigner."

The richest woman in the United States is one of the least publicized and least known, Mrs. Matthew Astor Wilks, daughter of the late Hetty Green, famous speculator. Mrs. Wilks has lived obscurely in Brooklyn and Hoboken, and, although she recently moved into an $11,000 apartment on Fifth avenue, she still shuns society. She is a skillful stock-market player, but not so amazingly clever as her mother.

"The Whitney women," says the article, "have always been as active, as prominent, as newsworthy as the Whitney men. They have backgrounds, interests, minds of their own." It describes Gertrude Vanderbilt Whitney as not "dilettantish about her interest in sculpture. She has carved not simply monuments, fountains, arches, but a career."

Joan Payson devotes herself to having a good time and is "crazy about dancing, crazy about parties, crazy about night clubs and crazy about bridge (and very scrupulous about collecting every penny she is owed)."

Newport Society Leader.

Mrs. Andrew Carnegie is "one of America's authentic grande dames," rivaled only by Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt as a leader of Newport society, the article says. Other thumbnail excerpts follow:

Mrs. Moses Taylor is "the perfect dowager, splendidly old-fashioned riding in taffeta in an immaculate carriage with two men on the box."

Mrs. Alexander Hamilton Rice benefits from two great fortunes, one from her father, William Elkins (gas, coal, oil, tractions), and one from her first husband, George Widener (oil, coal, street railways). She gave the Widener Memorial Library to Harvard in honor of her husband and son, drowned on the Titanic, a disaster from which she was saved.

Mrs. Hugh Dillman is the widow of one of the Dodge brothers and is now married to an actor formerly husband of Marjorie Rambeau. Her house in Palm Beach achieves its place in society more from her husband's "bonhomie than from her wealth."

Eschews Society.

Mrs. Alfred George Wilson, widow of another Dodge brother, entirely eschews society and is referred to on Wall Street as "America's No. 1 woman banker." She married a lumber magnate and seldom sees her sister.

Mrs. Dodge Sloan, one of three daughters of John F. Dodge, "began life in a mechanic's household" and now vies with Mrs. Payne Whitney for the title of First Lady of the Turf. Her stables are worth $1,500,000 and she spends half a million on them annually. She is afraid of horses.

Mrs. John T. Dorrance's husband was a chemist for the Campbell Preserve Co., and proposed condensed soup, an idea which netted her $120,000,000. She likes sewing, bridge and flowers.

Mrs. Edward V. Hartford received her money from the A. & P. grocery chain. A grandmother at 40, she lives in a house acquired from "one of Newport's greatest snobs, Commodore Elbridge T. Gerry," and is noted for her smart clothes.

Her daughter is the wife of a Russian caviar importer, Vadim Makaroff. The couple leads a life of luxurious sport with ski lodges in Canada, a racing yacht, and a tennis court inclosed in glass powerfully lighted for night games.

Mrs. W. F. Reilly, another A. & P. heiress, lives quietly in Orange, N. J.

Married to McCann.

Helena Woolworth was married to Charles E. F. McCann and is a very correct occupant of a place in the Social Register. Her sister, Mrs. James Donahue, is a widow of a "gambler who, after ruining any social aspirations she may have had, committed suicide."

Mrs. Charles H. Babcock, 28, received a birthday present last August of $30,000,000. She is the daughter of the president of the R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Co.

Doris Duke, now Mrs. James H. R. Cromwell, is the daughter of famous James B. Duke, tobacco impresario. She is one of the richest women in America. She dislikes publicity, dislikes Newport, prefers people of achievement to society bigwigs.

Mary Duke Biddle is the daughter of Benjamin N. Duke. She is reported to be interested in music, Duke University, but not in her husband, Anthony J. Drexel (Tony) Biddle, who was 'not her metier. He was her antithesis. She used to complain that it would be nice if occasionally there were artists around the house instead of athletes." Divorced, she is bringing up her son to be a diplomat, like his father, Minister to Norway.

U.S., Japanese Interests in Air Not in Conflict, Officials Aver

Plans of Tokyo Filed With League Reveal Future Routes to Mandated German Colonies; Use of Lines in War Called Improbable.

By the Associated Press.

Studying the possibility that Japanese and American airline routes may criss-cross over the western Pacific, Bureau of Air Commerce officials said yesterday they foresaw no possibility of a conflict of interests in that area.

Japan informed the League of Nations in its annual report recently that it planned to establish airlines to Pacific islands which formerly were German colonies.

Pan-American Airlines already has established service from the West Coast to Manila and plans an extension to Hongkong.

The first "survey" flight to China has been made, and Air Commerce officials said the new service would be established after test flights are completed, schedules arranged and other details worked out.

Pan-American is operating a commercial service, but Japan informed the League her proposed lines—which would cut across the Pan-American route—were designed "to promote efficiency of administration and assist industrial and social activities of the inhabitants."

The lines also would be useful, Japan said, to convey official documents, make scientific studies to benefit fishermen and provide a substitute should steamship service be disrupted.

Japan holds the islands under a League mandate. Numbering more than 1,000, they reach about 1,300 miles from north to south and about 2,700 miles from east to west in the south Pacific.

Air Commerce authorities said that should Japan later decide to commercialize her airlines there would be no question of competition for passenger traffic, because the lines would serve sufficient areas.

Asked what, if any, advantage the airlines would represent in event of war, one high official expressed the view that all transoceanic airlines would be "worthless" for military purposes.

He explained that it would be comparatively easy for an enemy to destroy far-distant bases. No nation, he said, would be likely to attempt to utilize anything as vulnerable as an airline in a war zone.

Aid Sped to U. S. Ship Drifting Off Ireland

Dublin (Monday), Oct. 26 (U.P.).—Two tugs sped from here under full steam early today to aid the S. S. American Shipper, drifting helplessly with a damaged rudder off "Codling" Lightship, 30 miles from the Wicklow Coast. The United States Line ship radioed for aid late lats night.

Reports from London quoted C. W. Roper, president of the U. S. Lines, as saying that he did not believe passengers and crew of the ship were in immediate danger. Roper said he believed the little vessel was carrying about 30 passengers.

Stains Found On Can Opener In Enslow Case

Pajamas Also Cited as Pointing to Son's Guilt in W. Va. Slaying.

By the Associated Press.

Huntington, W. Va., Oct. 25.—As Charles Buffington Baldwin, 41-year-old scion of a prominent family, sat in a jail cell here today awaiting a hearing on a charge of murdering his 63-year-old mother, detectives announced stains had been found on a pair of pajamas and a can opener picked up in the house.

Mrs. Julliette B. Enslow, Baldwin's twice-married mother was found beaten and strangled in bed eight days ago by her housekeeper. Coroner's physicians said she had been wounded four times on the head with a "sharp instrument."

The can opener and the pajamas will be analyzed, detectives said, in an effort to determine whether the stains on them are from Mrs. Enslow's blood.

Police first proceeded on the theory that Mrs. Enslow had been killed by a burglar. Two diamond rings which she wore were missing when the housekeeper discovered the body.

Late last night, announcing they had uncovered "new evidence," Police Lieut. Leslie J. Swann and Detective Ray Hagley went to the Enslow mansion and arrested Baldwin on a warrant charging him with his mother's murder.

Baldwin, who was a captain in the Army Air Corps during the World War, went along willingly. He spent Sunday quietly and made no statement regarding the charge against him.

Baldwin was the son of Charles Baldwin, sr., Mrs. Enslow's first husband who died more than 20 years ago.

His mother, who was 63, daughter of the city's first mayor, later married Frank Enslow, prominent attorney. He died several years ago.

Lieut. Swann and Detectives Hagley and C. E. Spencer found Baldwin sitting in a parlor at his home.

Swann, who has been in charge of the investigation since the start, related the conversation he said ensued as the officers appeared. He said he told Baldwin:

"Charlie, we've got bad news for you. We have come to arrest you for the murder of your mother."

Baldwin looked up and asked:

"Leslie, do you have to do that. Are you sure?"

Swann replied: "Yes, Charlie, you know I warned you before that the evidence pointed to you."

Senate Studies Steel 'Terror' Against Unions

La Follette Reveals Charges of Violence Against Labor Organizers.

Senator La Follette (Progressive), Wisconsin, revealed last night that the Senate committee investigating civil liberties violations is inquiring into charges of "a campaign of terror" against organizers attempting to unionize the steel industry. La Follette is chairman of the committee.

The Wisconsin Senator made public charges brought by Phil Murray, vice president of the United Mine Workers of America, who is in charge of the organization work, that in at least six instances organizers have been victims of physical violence. The charges were in the form of letters to the Governors of Ohio and West Virginia pleading for law enforcement.

The incidents, according to Murray, centered around Steubenville, Ohio, and Weirton, W. Va., where the plants of the National Steel Co. are situated. Murray directly charged that Ernest T. Weir, chairman of the board of the steel company, is responsible.

Study Continued.

"The committee at this time desires to announce that the study of this situation is being continued by its agents with a view of determining the extent, nature, and particulars of the violations which have been charged," LaFollette said.

"The committee has, from time to time, received many other complaints from various labor and civic organizations regarding alleged violations of the right of free speech and assembly, and violations of the rights of labor to organize collectively."

Beating of Claude R. Kramer, union organizer, by "eight thugs" in Steubenville June 30.

Beating of Richard Riser and Anthony Kowalsky, members of the organizing committee staff, on September 2, between Holliday's Cove and Steubenville.

Attack on Steve Barron on September 6 at Weirton.

Violations Ignored.

Lee Pressman, general counsel for the steel workers' organizing committee, in transmitting the Murray charges, said "open violations of civil liberties has been completely disregarded by the lawfully constituted authorities in the States."

"Shocking assaults upon steel workers and organizers of this committee have resulted in absolutely no redress through the local or State officials," he said. "Uncontroverted evidence as to the identity of the assailants, when presented to the grand juries, has simply been disregarded."

In his letter to the Governors of Ohio and West Virginia, Murray declared there has "occurred the most flagrant and shameful flouting of law enforcement."

"This campaign of terror," he continued, "has consisted of hiring of a gang of armed thugs—all of whom undoubtedly have past criminal records—for the sole purpose of criminally assaulting and beating steel workers who are attempting to organize into a union, as well as the organizers who are assisting these workers to exercise a right which is guaranteed to them under the laws of the United States."

Pittsburgh, Oct. 25 (AP).—A strike order went into effect today at six plants of the Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co. employing approximately 6,000 men.

The order was issued by Glenn McCabe, president of the Federation of Flat Glass Workers, who claimed the company refused the union's demand for a "closed shop."

The plants involved are situated at Ford City and Creighton, in Pennsylvania; Mount Vernon, Ohio; Henryetta, Okla.; Crystal, Mo., and Clarksburg, W. Va.

D. F. Cannon, assistant superintendent of the company's plant at Ford City, said no attempt would be made to operate while the strike is in effect.

New Arrests Hinted In N. J. Extortion Plot

Trenton, N. J., Oct. 25 (AP).—Reticence of Federal agents to discuss arrest of a suspect in an extortion plot aimed at Mrs. Thomas Middleton, aunt of Countess Barbara Hutton Haugwitz-Reventlow, led to speculation today that additional arrests might be forthcoming.

Agents, declining to be quoted, admitted "investigation is still going on."

The suspect, Melvin Strickland, 27-year-old Atlantic City mechanic, was held in Mercer County Jail under $10,000 bail to await action of the Federal grand jury.

dress, told the thousands that as Catholics it was their duty to study communism so they could combat it. Branding it as a menace to Christianity, the Baltimore prelate warned members of his church that they could not fight communism without knowing all about it.

Belief and Unbelief.

Mgr. Corrigan, in his sermon, developed the same theme when he said: "No one standing on the watchtowers of this Nation and reading the signs of the times will deny that in one generation the unhappy line of religious cleavage has lost its accentuation as between creed and creed." The line is now deepened and widened, the rector said, "between belief and unbelief—between religion and unreligion."

In 30 years the percentage of American citizens who have willingly declared themselves on the official census of the Nation to be without any religion at all has risen to be a majority of the people, Mgr. Corrigan pointed out. They do not all accept the stigma of irreligion, but masquerading under the name of "broadmindness" such men "cannot be counted on the side of supporting the principles of eternal law."

As a bulwark to block the "grave crisis" of religious confusion the rector asserted the Providence of God had "prepared a needed instrument for the work of the Church."

"You men of the Holy Name Union must know this Union as God's providentially prepared answer to the indifferentism of American life today.

The Holy Name men must carry on the work started centuries ago, Msgr. Corrigan said, by "a group of zealous souls united to fight the evil of the hour." He named as members of this group, St. Dominic, St. Francis of Assisi, and St. Ignatius who founded the Society of Jesus.

The Country Voices Pride in the United States Navy

Navy Day—October 27—1936

The Hon. Claude A. Swanson, Secretary of the Navy—"On October 27, Navy Day will be celebrated throughout the United States, commemorating the birth of our Navy 161 years ago contemporaneous with the founding of the Nation.

"Vessels of the Fleet will 'dress ship' and shore stations will open wide their gates on this day when the thoughts of the Nation turn to their first line of defense. In the past, millions of our citizens have visited us on Navy Day to get better acquainted with their Navy. On next Tuesday we hope that many more will call. Through this means and with the help of patriotic societies and groups sponsoring local celebrations in every city and town in the country the American people will better know the Navy, and the part it has played and will play in our country's history.

"We are attaining a treaty strength Navy. By regular annual replacement program we must keep it at a strength commensurate with our needs, fully manned and properly serviced by adequate bases and auxiliary vessels and augmented by a strong modern Merchant Marine. The American people, understanding the Navy and its work, will insist on this."

Admiral William H. Standley, U. S. N., Chief of Operations—"Next Tuesday we will again celebrate Navy Day. Fittingly observed on the birthday of President Theodore Roosevelt, so much of whose life was devoted to establishing a sound naval policy for the United States, each October 27 has come to mean a day for serious thought on the subject of reasonable naval defense.

"Through the land, there will be held ceremonies paying tribute to our sea heroes of the past and recalling the important part the Navy has played in making and keeping us a Nation. Ships and stations will welcome millions of visitors. In this way the people of America will reach a better understanding of the Navy and its work. This is essential for the future well-being of our country.

"A well-equipped, well-manned Navy strong enough to protect our interests is necessary to that well-being. And a regular annual building plan, not only of fighting ships, but also of auxiliaries, sufficient, well-trained personnel, and adequate shore facilities for servicing the Fleet, must be provided. In addition, a strong Merchant Marine—a vital part of a nation's sea power—is highly important. An awakened public opinion will see that these essentials are maintained."

"THE PRIDE THE COUNTRY has in its Fleet will be manifested in the nation-wide celebration to be held on Navy Day. It is based upon the profound conviction that when the Treaty Navy program which the President is pressing shall have been realized there will be in instant readiness a powerful sea force prepared to defend our territory and vital interests against invasion. The very existence of our Fleet, rounded out with battleship replacements, dirigibles, necessary auxiliary and a complementary addition of personnel, will make aggressors wary of provoking our might. It cannot be too strongly emphasized that the People's Navy has no desire for war. THE ARMY AND NAVY JOURNAL, 'spokesman of the Services since 1863,' necessarily has intimate knowledge of this state of feeling among the rank and file. The Navy's fundamental purpose is the preservation of American peace—by its power in being to make foreign governments considerate of our just right. Except for a few vessels for the protection of American citizens in Asiatic and Spanish waters, our ships are kept at home, and their maneuvers are conducted in areas which relate solely to American defense and far from contact with the sea interests of foreign governments. No authority at the Navy Department would countenance an act of aggression by our naval representatives abroad, and by reason of their education and discipline such representatives are impressed with the necessity of careful observance of the Government's policy. In short, the spirit of the Navy is against aggression either by our own act or by that of a foreign nation. Its inculcation begins at the Naval Academy, where the sons of the people taken from every walk of life, acquire the rudiments of their profession. The curriculum of the Academy has no taint of militarism. It is based, as Rear Admiral David F. Sellers, the present able Superintendent, has said, upon the sound purpose to develop manliness and initiative, a sense of responsibility and self-reliance, a discipline to assure coordination into the fighting machine which the Fleet constitutes, and, above all, to create personnel for the efficient use of that machine in time of need. Graduated annually from the Academy is a group of ambitious young men, who, in order to rise, or even to continue, in their profession, must exercise the qualities their alma mater has fostered; and in time of war rushing to their aid will be civilians who are patriotically devoting their time to study of, and training in, the duties and responsibilities of the sea profession. It is the business of officers to promote morale by consideration of as well as by the training of the enlisted personnel, and the schooling of the sailors relates not only to war but to peace. Part of the Navy is the United States Marine Corps, that admirable organization whose achievements are written in gold on the scroll of our history. In its officers and men, in its ships, in its air equipment, the Navy meets the pride of the Nation with equal pride in the Nation. It realizes it represents America at sea. And this realization whets its determination to discharge its mission in accordance with American principles and American ideals."—(Editorial from the Army and Navy Journal of October 24, 1936.)

The Hon. Harry H. Woodring, Secretary of War—"The War Department is honored to join with the rest of the Nation in expressing its respect, confidence, and affection for the Navy on this, its own day.

"The great contribution of the Navy to the security of the country has never been so pertinent and so evident as it is at present."

General Malin Craig, Chief of Staff of the Army—"On behalf of the officers and enlisted men of the Army I am happy on this Navy Day to transmit to our brothers in service the continued pride in association, and respect in achievement which the Navy so richly deserves."

Maj. Gen. John H. Russell, U. S. M. C., Major General Commandant of the U. S. Marine Corps—"The United States Marine Corps, as part of the Navy, joins with the Nation in celebrating the fiftieth annual Navy Day on October twenty-seventh.

"On that day the Marines at the various stations, in the United States and abroad, will be 'at home' to visitors—to acquaint them with the Corps which has served our country for over one hundred and sixty years.

"This section of the naval service welcomes the people of the Nation."

Rear Adm. R. R. Waesche, U. S. C. G., Commandant of the U. S. Coast Guard—"A very great pleasure is afforded me in being privileged for the first time, as Commandant of the Coast Guard, to send greetings to the Navy on Navy Day.

"The splendid spirit of co-operation and close relationship which has, for many years, existed between the Navy and the Coast Guard, is most gratifying to me, and it is my purpose and sincere wish that this bond of friendship and understanding may reach, through our future efforts, greater proportions than ever before attained."

Maryland Man Killed by Auto; 8 Injured Here

Sunday's toll of traffic fatalities in the District and environs was one dead and eight injured.

John Edward McMahon, 38, of Washington Grove, Md., succumbed to injuries received when run over by an automobile on the Gaithersburg-Laytonsville road near Emory Grove, Md.

Clarence J. Day, 28, of Gaithersburg, Md., told police McMahon was lying in the middle of the road.

The Rockville Rescue Squad took the injured man to the Gaithersburg office of Dr. William C. Miller, who pronounced him dead. McMahon later was removed to the Barber funeral home in Laytonsville.

James White, 9, of 1524 East Capitol street, walked into the side of a moving automobile, operated by R. G. Key, 901 Eleventh street southeast, and was knocked to the ground. The accident occurred at the intersection of Second and East Capitol streets.

Key took the injured boy to Providence Hospital.

Henry Strong, 19, colored, of 306 F street southwest, collided while cycling with a truck operated by Mervin L. Riley, 31, of 318 Twelfth street southeast, at an intersection near his home. He was admitted to Providence Hospital for skull injuries.

A collision between a taxicab operated by James H. Williams, 58, colored, 2303 Fourteenth street northwest, and an automobile driven by Joseph F. Jones, 18, colored, 649 Acker street northeast, at Canal and D street southwest, resulted in possible fracture of the left jaw and lacerations of the scalp for Roscoe Reeves, 15, of 1025 New Jersey avenue southeast, a passenger in Jones' car. The injured youth was taken to Providence Hospital for treatment.

Forced off the road by an automobile, occupant or occupants of which so far have not been apprehended, four colored passengers escaped serious injury when their car careened off the highway and turned over. A fifth, James Fowler, 55, colored, of Upper Marlboro, Md., was found to be suffering from a broken collar bone at Freedman's Hospital.

The accident occurred on the Largo road, 3 miles from Marlboro Pike, Maryland. The uninjured are Violet Wilson, 17, Bennings, District of Columbia; Joseph C. Washington, 21, Prince Georges County, R. F. D. 1, Maryland; Mayzie Jefferson, 29, and Russell Jefferson, 55, of Largo, Md., all colored.

Arnoux Far Ahead In Indo-China Race

Paris, Oct. 25 (AP).—Maurice Arnoux, French long-distance flier, tonight raced toward Bagdad with a commanding lead over his grounded rivals in the 15,000-mile round-trip flight between Paris and Saigon, French Indo-China.

Arnoux, accompanied by Andrew Japy and a navigator, was reported in a dispatch from Damascus, Syria, to have passed over that city tonight for Bagdad.

Their competitors in the race, which started this morning from Le Bourget airfield, were grounded in Europe.

Michel Detroyat, flying with Gaston Durmon, was forced down near Corinth, Greece, when his airplane ran out of fuel. He planned to take off again tomorrow morning. Leon Challe, flying the remaining entry in the race with two companions, was at Bron Airport, near Lyon. He encountered trouble soon after taking off this morning.

Car Plunges Up Bank, Overturns; Driver Escapes

An automobile driven, police said, by Pickney A. Ryon, an employe in the office of the clerk of the Maryland Circuit Court at Upper Marlboro, hurtled a 6-foot bank and landed upside down in the front yard of G. W. Roberts, 715 Central avenue, Seat Pleasant, early yesterday. Ryon miraculously escaped with a bruised head and Roberts' front porch missed being damaged by a scant foot. Ryon's machine was said to have been sideswiped by another car.

Duce Decided to Seize Ethiopia In '33, De Bono Book Reveals

By the Associated Press.

Rome, Oct. 25.—Mussolini decided upon the Italo-Abyssinian war in 1933 and began his preparations then, Marshal Emilio de Bono, who commanded the Italian troops at the start of the war, reveals in his book on "The Preparation and the First Operations."

In 1933, he writes, "the head of the government fixed his thoughts on the possibility of military operations in East Africa." De Bono made an extensive survey and submitted his findings to Il Duce.

At the beginning of 1934, he relates, the commander of the troops in Eritrea and the Italian military attache at Addis Ababa came to Italy for talks with Mussolini and himself.

De Bono then describes the initial preparation in the colony. More native troops were enlisted. Road work was begun. Building of barracks and warehouses started. At the same time a political office was started with the task of undermining the allegiance of the Ethiopians to Emperor Haile Selassie.

De Bono left for Africa again January 7, 1935. In May difficulties with England began. At the end of June, De Bono received a letter from Il Duce with regard to Foreign Secretary Anthony Eden's trip to Rome.

"In a very secret note," De Bono says, "he (Mussolini) told me that if we got in trouble with the English, we would naturally be obliged to renounce our offensive action and content ourselves in the beginning with keeping to a defensive which would have insured the integrity of the colony.

"This was indispensable also to reduce consumption to a minimum because our supplies, with the closing of the Suez Canal and the probable superiority of the British fleet over our naval division, would have become more than problematical."

"But even in this to-be-deprecated case, Il Duce had decided to take the dare."

30-Pint Liquor Cache Found on Parking Lot

Police uncovered a liquor cache of 30 pints on a parking lot near Twelfth and H streets northwest, yesterday.

Policeman J. O. Hite of the traffic division confiscated the whisky after he received a tip. He said bootleggers purchased the liquor Saturday night and planned to resell it for a profit on Sunday.

Eternal Peace Is Not Possible, Mussolini Says

By the Associated Press.

Imola, Italy, Oct. 25.—Premier Mussolini, cheered by 70,000 listeners, expressed his hope today for "long periods of peace"—but not for "eternal peace, which is absurd and impossible."

His admonition of yesterday at Bologna that Italy's "olive branch grows out of an immense forest of 8,000,000 bayonets," Il Duce declared, "must be heard by all the world."

"The Italian people, which gave its blood for the empire, is ready for any other trial when the crucial hour approaches."

Mussolini recalled that in his August 30 address at the conclusion of Italy's annual military maneuvers, he "warned the Italian people and other peoples that Italy desires peace, but that it also is necessary to be strong."

In that speech at Avellino, Il Duce warned the world he could mobilize 8,000,000 soldiers "in the course of a few hours and after a simple order."

"Our security is in our force; above all, it is in our iron will," he declared today, amidst the cheers of the residents of this rich agricultural region.

"It is necessary to work constantly to increase ever more the well-being of the Italian people," Il Duce said.

Chief Assails Data On Social Security

Arthur J. Altmeyer, acting chairman of the Social Security Board, yesterday said "misleading" information has been circulated relating to operation of the social security act.

"The Social Security Board," Altmeyer said, "has received from many parts of the country copies of posters, bulletins and pay envelopes inserts warning workers that a Federal tax will be deducted from their pay beginning January 1, 1937 * * *.

"The statements are nearly all either misleading as to the amount of tax that will be paid or actually misstate the amount of tax that will be paid. They make no reference to the fact that the employer is also required to pay a tax. Even worse, they are completely silent or cast doubt upon the substantial benefits that will be payable to workers. Some of these statements go so far as to suggest that the Government may not live up to its promises to pay these benefits when due."

Travesty On Planning.

The downtown parking problem is in the news again. With an insistency that never relents, the question of how to provide space for the automobiles used by one-third of the 20,000 Federal employes in the new buildings between Fifteenth and Seventh streets has again thrust itself upon the attention of the Fine Arts Commission and the National Capital Park and Planning Commission.

That the concentration of Government offices in the tight area known as the "triangle" would bring parking congestion was appreciated by the earliest architects of the project. But all plans to solve the difficulty failed because of the costs involved. Similarly, recommendations made by the Park and Planning Commission in 1930 to include garage space in the basements and lower stories of the new buildings were turned down.

An automobile requires approximately the same space as a worker in a building. Thus, to have provided quarters for 6,000 vehicles within the "triangle" would have meant an increase of approximately one-third in the size of buildings. As an alternative, subterranean garages have been suggested, particularly for the grand plaza on Fourteenth street which is soon to be closed as a parking lot and made over into a park. Here again an estimated cost of $1,350 per car develops. Officials of the Treasury's procurement division view this expense as too high to warrant consideration. But many employes would doubtless rather pay the necessary rental charges than be deprived of any place to store their automobiles within reasonable distance of their offices.

A so-called "depressed parking area," such as may be found connected with the new Public Health Service building, is another solution proposed. Still a third idea is skeleton buildings with attractive fronts, which have proved feasible in other cities.

But nothing definite has been done and the problem becomes more acute every day. The "triangle" presents a travesty on planning, so far as the important item of parking is concerned. In the final analysis, Congress is to blame. No long-range parking policy for areas congested by Federal buildings has ever been adopted. There is now a movement under foot to obtain such a decision at the coming session, but it is already years overdue. Even when a policy is adopted it will be too late to remedy the inexcusable congestion that has been inflicted upon one of the most important sections of the city.

A "Briey" In Politics.

Political bombardment has been carried to such extremes that the average voter wonders how the candidates and their regiments can find ammunition to keep on firing until election day. Every issue under the sun, it would seem, has been riddled by heavy shelling. But after November 3, when all is again quiet on the American front, the public will discover that some vital questions of national policy have been entirely skipped over.

According to tradition growing out of the World War, the Briey basin in northern France escaped bombardment from both the German and French armies. When it came within the range of Germany's military operations, it is said, this region was considerately saved from devastation. Likewise the French are reported to have guarded Briey from their own fire when they retook this territory. To make the story complete this deference is romantically attributed to the residence in this area of a powerful family whose interest both sides were eager to protect.

Whether or not the story is true, its elements are familiar. The most notable "Briey" of the 1936 Presidential campaign is silver. Realizing that the silver-purchasing policy imposed upon it by Congress is essentially indefensible, the Administration has not attempted to defend that measure. And the Republicans, eager to attract all possible votes in the silver-producing States, have maintained pusillanimous silence on one of the most ridiculous experiments of the entire New Deal.

Only one mention of silver can be found in the G. O. P. records of the campaign. At Salt Lake City, in the heart of the silver-mining region, Chairman Hamilton, of the Republican National Committee, said that establishment of the gold standard does not imply that a fair price can not be maintained for silver. Beyond that word of encouragement to subsidy seekers the G. O. P. has been content to let a defenseless policy stand for the sake of political expediency. That is one part of the record in which the party will be able to find no pride whether it wins or loses.

A Negative Program.

Gov. Landon's long-awaited speech on foreign policy, as delivered at Indianapolis on Saturday, was that of a man who has thought only superficially in this difficult and complicated field. Admittedly it is impossible at this time to present any formula carrying positive assurance either of world peace or of successful American abstention in the event of another general and protracted war. But that does not mean that Mr. Landon's casual dismissal of current peace-preservation efforts, coupled with somewhat contradictory suggestions of his own, can be regarded as a satisfactory program.

There must be general agreement with the assertion of the Republican candidate that the efforts of the League of Nations to achieve peace through collective action have failed. The successful aggressions of Japan against China and Italy against Ethiopia both testify to this.

But when Mr. Landon argues therefrom that mediation and arbitration can be regarded as hopeful alternatives he indicates complete ignorance of the techniques which throughout have been followed at Geneva. Mediation and arbitration have always been the very essence of the League system. Sanctions, employed only once, have never been regarded as anything but a last alternative when every avenue of purely pacific procedure is blocked. So Mr. Landon merely confuses the picture when he asserts that "there is a plan for peace" more promising than that which the League has employed.

The Republican nominee correctly voices the aspirations of the great majority of his countrymen when he says our policy should be "to encourage by every honorable means within our power, except the use of armed force, the arbitration of international disputes." But after reaching this conclusion, and even urging the development of compulsory arbitration, he turns his back on that agency of American and Republican origin—the World Court—which was established in the hope of furthering this very end. His stated reason for doing so is that "some of the judges of the court now represent dictatorships." This rather captious criticism certainly applies equally to any conceivable form of arbitration in a world which now numbers more dictatorships than democratic governments.

Anticipating, as did Mr. Harding in 1920, that the issue of American collaboration in organized international peace efforts will be "finally settled" in the negative, Gov. Landon at Indianapolis advocated the development of a flexible neutrality policy. Here he insisted as firmly on the protection of American rights as he elsewhere opposed the assumption of American responsibilities.

This concept of neutrality is less likely than our present legislation on the subject to encourage aggression. As Mr. Landon points out, it does not serve notice in advance that the United States will draw no distinctions whatsoever between the aggressor and his victim. Nevertheless, it is diametrically opposed to the procedure advocated by the last Republican Secretary of State, Mr. Henry L. Stimson. In his recent book on "The Far Eastern Crisis," Mr. Stimson concludes "it is vital" that organized efforts to safeguard peace "shall not be hampered by the fear that collective action will be stabbed in the back" by the United States. That fear Mr. Landon would seemingly perpetuate.

Where the Republican candidate fails fundamentally in his reasoning in the field of foreign policy is by refusing to analyze the causes of the failure of the League of Nations. That is not due to any deficiencies of organization or method at Geneva, but merely to the unwillingness of the Great Powers, including our own, to make any sacrifices which would in any way limit their complete freedom of action. Such attitudes, of course, render war more probable, in a way not lessened by Mr. Landon's promise to conscript wealth as well as men in the event of its advent.

This negative outlook on the current world situation may be called realistic only in a very narrow sense. It cannot possibly be regarded as indicating a constructive or statesmanlike attitude in a great crisis of world history. Nor is the grayness of Mr. Landon's approach to the problem of foreign relations much relieved by his assurance that, if elected, he will carry forward the promising Latin-American policy already launched by the present Administration.

The Storks Of Toronto.

The storks assigned to Toronto duty must be planning, between gasps, some sort of celebration for November 1. That day ends their 10-year job of supplying babies to the entrants in the $750,000 maternity marathon instigated by the will of an eccentric Canadian sportsman.

Twelve (and it may be 13 by now) squealing bundles have been delivered to the apparent leader in the contest and only slightly lesser numbers to eight other competitors. The premier of Ontario has called the whole affair a "most revolting exhibition." To the storks this must be mild language. For it now appears that all their efforts may come to naught. A joker in the bizarre testament may divert most of the prize money into the Toronto city treasury rather than into the hands of the most prolific mother. Moreover, relatives of the deceased sportsman are organizing to contest the will.

Such crude trifling with human lives must arouse contempt even among the storks. The terrestial cousins of these birds (or were they brothers on sabbatical leave?) several years ago took sudden wing and deserted Strassburg, where for centuries they had adorned the city's chimney-pots with nests and long-legged silhouettes. Their reason for leaving was never clearly determined. If the storks of Toronto should follow a similar course, however, there will be none to query their reason or to doubt their justification.

A Government Career Service.

According to reports, the President's committee on administrative management has been studying plans for developing a career system for Government employes similar to that employed by Great Britain. Many Americans have only a vague understanding of what is meant by a "career system" or in what respect it differs from our present classified civil service. Some, indeed, believe that the only essential to the upbuilding of an efficient personnel is elimination of the spoils system and appointment on the basis of merit.

While it may seem a trifle premature to discuss reforms of this sort at a time when the spoils system is still flourishing and expanding with the multiplication of so-called emergency agencies, it is not too soon to emphasize the importance of making the public service an attractive career for able and ambitious young people.

Excepting the Army and Navy, and to a limited extent the State Department, Government service in this country does not provide career opportunities in the sense in which that word is understood in Great Britain or on the continent. Civil service laws and regulations protect a large proportion of Federal employes from arbitrary dismissals and afford them a certain security of tenure. But these negative advantages are not sufficient to attract into the service the type of men fitted to hold positions of power and responsibility.

If public service is to become a worthwhile career, provision must be made for promotion to higher grades on a basis assuring fair treatment for all and favoritism for none. And there must be prizes worth striving for, at the top of the bureaucratic ladder. So long as all the best positions are given to politicians chosen from other fields, the lower ranks of the civil service are fairly certain to be filled with men and women of mediocre ability.

The emphasis which the British place upon the career aspects of their civil service is indicated by the large number of responsible official positions they have made available to men and women working up through the ranks. The prestige which the service enjoys and the high reputation it has acquired is proof of its effectiveness.

The United States has a long way to go before it can hope to elevate the civil service to the place it occupies in Great Britain. Indeed, differences in national temperament and in social and political institutions will make it extremely difficult for us to go as far as the British in surrendering to permanent, nonpolitical officials control over the routine business of state, without regard to the comings and goings of partisan administrations.

However, we have already learned that technical positions and jobs requiring special training of any sort cannot be filled by the hit or miss methods of the spoilsman. By degrees we should be able to proceed from reluctant acceptance of the merit system to the next stage of recognizing that the public interest is best served by men who enter public office with the intention of making it a lifetime career.

Non-alcoholic Football.

Princeton University had more than a 7-0 victory over Navy to celebrate after Saturday's game. There was the added fact that only a scant dozen of empty liquor bottles were picked up by the groundkeepers when the spectators had left the stands. This was in marked contrast with the two truckloads collected after one game last season at Palmer Stadium. Admittedly, that game was played in the midst of a snowstorm while last Saturday at Princeton was mild and sunny. But allowing for this climatic difference, the change in attitude toward drinking was evident. Princeton authorities are confident that their efforts to rid football games of almost traditional alcoholic excesses are bearing fruit.

The tactics used at Princeton are to attach to each ticket to the stadium a request signed by the president of the university that persons attending the game abstain from the use of liquor. That action is in line with an antidrinking program begun two years ago among colleges generally. Last year a group of Southern colleges organized undergraduate vigilantes and commissioned them to eject from the stands any violators of a "no liquor" rule. The same plan, with modifications, has also been followed by several Middle Western institutions. Typical of these is Ohio State University where recent football games have been played to the accompaniment of so little drinking that sports writers have felt impelled to give the fact prominent mention in their stories.

Unlike most collegiate fashions, non-alcoholic football did not begin on Eastern campuses and move South and West but the reverse. That it bids fair to take hold in these parts is indicated by Princeton's first success. Only those few who seem to regard the exhilaration of a football game as license for boorish conduct will have real cause for lament over this trend. For the rest, football should become an even more pleasant Saturday afternoon diversion.

Support For Mr. Lewis.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

For the first time during this campaign I am taking the liberty of writing to a newspaper to indorse the record and character of a member of Congress who is seeking re-election.

I refer to Hon. David J. Lewis of the Sixth Maryland District, in which your paper has a very wide circulation. I am taking this unusual liberty because of my deep and sincere interest both personally and officially in the return of Mr. Lewis to Congress.

I have served with him for quite a long time and am fully familiar with his long public service in the House and as a member of the Federal Tariff Commission. Without flattery to Mr. Lewis, I regard him as one of the ablest, most courageous and useful members in the House of Representatives. His broad knowledge and extensive study not only of general matters of public policy, but especially his profound acquaintance with problems of the social aspects of our national life especially fit him for still greater service to his District and the country. He is an honest man. He is an able man. He deserves further public service based upon his excellent record and I feel confident that the voters of his district will not hesitate to return him to the House by a splendid majority.

"Gone With The Wind."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

I have just read "Gone With the Wind." I am in a quandary as to why a reviewer of current literature for The Post should commend a book of this type. While the world is in a turmoil and peace seems to be as far as the poles, I cannot see why an author should endeavor to rekindle the flame of hatred and strife and renew again the bitterness that prevailed in our own land following the close of the Civil War. This book reeks with hatred, rancor, sectional strife, vulgarity, sensuality, contradiction and malice.

It has been suggested that the Blue and the Gray should unite in one common desire to promote harmony and peace within our own land. If such books as "Gone With the Wind" are published and read by the youth of the country, the hope for tranquillity and union will fade as quickly as the dew before the midday sun.

Roosevelt Vs. Hoover.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

No one could have stopped the 1929-1932 decline any more than he could have stopped a cyclone. Mr. Hoover has been criticized because he did not stop it. We should be grateful that he did not make gestures toward interfering with economic laws; for had he interposed any artificial barriers in the way of the natural forces governing the decline, the depression in this country would have been prolonged. All he could do was to feed the hungry and attempt to mitigate the suffering until the storm had spent itself. This he did throughout the whole depression, and with a rightful economy in the spending of the public money. We also should be grateful to him, that in spite of the demanding hysteria of many of the people, he did not impose upon the whole people panaceas which would have proven futile and costly.

The world-wide depression which came as an aftermath of the World War ended, and recovery began throughout the world, including the United States, in the summer of 1932. If Mr. Hoover, or some other sound person, had been elected in 1932, recovery would have gone forward here as it has elsewhere in the world, and this country would now be back to or near normal prosperity.

President Roosevelt, intentionally or unintelligently, halted recovery in the United States. As soon as he was elected he began creating the banking panic. After he took office he launched one revolutionary experiment after another, all obstructive to recovery. He took the Nation off the gold standard. He debased the dollar. He created the NIRA, regimenting all industry and suspending the antitrust laws. He borrowed and disbursed incredible billions of public funds, creating a vast political machine and building up an army of many millions of citizens who are taught that the Government owes them a living without work. He imposed upon citizens unconstitutional laws restricting their liberty and confiscating their property.

He created a new depression.

The Dairyman's View.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

At the hearing relative to the rise in milk prices held at the Agricultural Building on October 20, Mr. Derrick, president of the Maryland and Virginia Milk Producers Association, showed conclusively (as the result of much study and research) that the price received by farmers for their milk has not increased while the cost of production has risen alarmingly—in fact to the point where profits are wiped out.

The Washington market is the most exacting in the world—the regulations imposed on producers being many and strictly enforced. At the same time, in other cities where the producer has less to contend with, the price has risen sometimes 100 per cent, while in our Capital it has remained the same.

It was urged by those opposing a rise that the consumer could not afford the extra cent per quart—the single penny that means the difference between profit and loss—yet the consumer continues to buy other commodities that have risen as much as 50 per cent or more.

At one time a tax of a cent a cone was imposed on ice cream. It did not affect the sale of cones, yet a proportionate tax on milk would mean a rise of about 20 cents a quart.

If Washingtonians consume a pint of milk a day, as is stated, the rise asked by dairymen would mean a half cent per capita each day, or 15 cents a month. Surely, with the rise in every other product—and increased purchasing power generally—this is not too much to ask?

A dairyman's life is probably the hardest of any farmer's. His day begins at 4 a. m. and ends after dark. He labors in bitter cold, in rain and snow and mud; in summer under blistering sun. He has drought, shortage of water and of feed, sickness in his herd (and not the least of his annoyances, troublesome calves) to contend with. He works 365 days in the year—with no free Sundays and no vacations.

And those whose working hours are from 9 to 4; who sit in comfortable offices and have every Sunday off—as well as many Saturday afternoons—who are not affected by Nature's blows, oppose this small profit (in some cases merely a living wage) for the men who supply children's most necessary food!

An amusing note was struck when it was suggested by these same guardians of the public's purse that Uncle Sam lend the dairymen cash enough to buy feed for their cows. Lend money (that would have to be repaid—with interest) so they could continue to supply milk at cost!

How about lending that 15 cents a month instead?

Had Olson Lived.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

In listening to the vituperative talks of the Republicans I have yet to learn what they think should be done to help the destitute millions. They left an emergency condition on the hands of Mr. Roosevelt, yet their harangues deal chiefly with technicalities about the Constitution and the Supreme Court.

In the height of the depression the beloved Gov. Floyd Olson was quoted at saying, "If my people are going to starve I hope the Government goes right to hell!"

Had he lived, Olson would have succeeded Roosevelt as President in 1940.

President Roosevelt's Promises.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

Your Mr. Franklyn Waltman is bitter in his condemnation of President Roosevelt's alleged inconsistencies. He says:

There are some among the New Dealers who have the brazen affrontery to contend that Mr. Roosevelt did not deceive the country in 1932 but gave it plainly to understand what to expect from him because he said he was going to give us a New Deal.

A great many readers of The Post, despite Mr. Waltman's fulminations, I am certain, are still fair enough to concede that no "affrontery" is involved, nor effrontery, either, in their contention that Mr. Roosevelt as President has neither lost sight of nor been swerved from the essential course which as a nominee he prepared for his administration in 1932.

In his campaign speeches four years ago Mr. Roosevelt frequently expressed his conviction that—and these are his exact words:

The only hope for . . . bringing the Nation back to its former proud position of domestic happiness and of financial, industrial, agricultural and commercial leadership lies in a drastic change in economic and governmental policies.

At Madison Square Garden, on the night before election, he said:

There can be only one great principle to guide our course in the coming years. We have learned the lesson that extravagant advantages for the few ultimately depress the many. . . . We must put behind us the idea that an uncontrolled, unbalanced economy, creating paper profits for a relatively small group, means or ever can mean prosperity.

After the election, from the steps of the Capitol, on the occasion of his inauguration, Mr. Roosevelt said:

We face our common difficulties. . . . Values have shrunken to fantastic levels; taxes have risen; our ability to pay has fallen; government of all kinds is faced by serious curtailment of income; the means of exchange are frozen in the currents of trade; the withered leaves of industrial enterprise lie on every side; farmers find no markets for their produce; the savings of many years in thousands of families are gone. . . . I am prepared under my Constitutional duty to recommend the measures that a stricken Nation in the midst of a stricken world may require. . . . I shall not evade the clear course of duty. . . . I shall ask Congress for . . . broad executive power to wage a war against the emergency, as great as the power that would be given me if we were in fact invaded by a foreign foe.

These statements were applauded and acclaimed by the people in a spirit of practical unanimity. The President took off his coat and went to work. What he has done is a matter of record. He adhered closely to the course which he outlined. He has been consistent. The country is definitely prospering. It is not brazen effrontery in any of these things; but to say otherwise is brazen ignorance.

FREDERICK W. STECKMAN.

The Second Four Years

POLITICAL commentators agree that President Roosevelt would not run for a third term if he should be re-elected in 1936, but they disagree on what his general course would be if he were re-elected. Some believe that he would veer to the Left, relieved of the necessity of placating the moderates. Others predict that he would tend to the Right, no longer needing to cater to Labor and the "progressives."

Some of these commentators believe that Roosevelt in a second term would aim at little new legislation, because he would not have to strengthen himself for another election. Others believe that he would try to reform the economic and social system even more, for the very same reason. At all events there is pretty general agreement that he would find Congress less tractable—partly because most of his patronage would have already been dispensed, partly because he would be retiring from office at the end of the term.

It is difficult to generalize in comparing the second term of Presidents with their first. The situations varied markedly. Coolidge, in his second term, pursued pretty much the same course as in his first term. But he had more opposition in Congress, partly because in his last two years the Republicans had no working majority in the Senate.

At Wilson's second inauguration the country was preparing to enter the World War. During the war the President got practically everything he asked of Congress, but the political truce ended with the armistice. The Democratic party had lost control of both houses of Congress, and a legislative deadlock reigned between the armistice and the inauguration of Harding. Many of such important bills as were enacted met with Presidential vetoes.

* * *

Theodore Roosevelt in his second term was more radical in his legislative proposals than during his first term. Possibly this was because on succeeding to the Presidency he had pledged himself to carry out the policies of the conservative McKinley. Yet even though his party enjoyed a large working majority in both the Senate and the House, Congress gave Roosevelt relatively little of what he asked for in his second term. The leaders of the Republican Party were more conservative than the President, and they never forgot that he would not be the nominee in 1908. On many occasions he could not move them, on others he had to compromise with them. One theory of the time was that Roosevelt did not really expect many of his more far-reaching proposals to be adopted, but was only preparing the ground for their success in the future.

* * *

Cleveland's second term was separated by four years from his first. In his first he had managed to control his party in Congress. In his second term President and Congress were increasingly at loggerheads, although the President's program was pretty much the same as in his first term. The country had plunged headlong into a deep depression; the Populists were strong; free silver had much support. Many of the Democratic leaders repudiated their leader on the tariff, and so changed his tariff bill that he let it become law without his signature. The rift between President and Congress became deeper midway in his second term, when the Democrats lost control of both branches of Congress.

In the case of Grant, the only other President since the Civil War to serve two terms, Presidential policies were largely the same in the second as in the first term. But Grant was a weak President, and his course was determined largely by his party leaders. In the second half of Grant's second term, the President's party lost control of the House of Representatives.

Return Of The Piano.

Impending for some time, the return of the piano as nucleus of family life has definitely come. And how welcome it is. The size of the instrument may have undergone a condensation co-equal with the tendency to smaller homes, but the right direction of the movement is unquestioned. There has been too much "canned" music in family life.

Years ago the piano and the hearthstone alike were symbols of domesticity. Around the piano gathered the family, whether the individual exponent of the art was a master or not. The old square type lent itself commodiously to centralization. Some of the prosperous could boast of a grand, but such possessors were a bit grand themselves. The old square in the parlor was the basis of co-operation and its successor was the upright, later supplanted by the baby grand. The new piano is a marvel of concentration, but no less an incitement to musical effort.

One local piano maker hit the nail on the head when he said the piano was "what the public wanted." It has wanted it, and now it has it again. Of course, the radio has its place, too, but even a Hofmann or a Paderewski, canned with most delicate flavor, is, after all, not the daughter of the family, even though she makes occasional mistakes in her confident accompaniments. At any rate, the family is not too particular. There is a sense of well-being in the air. The "crowd" is coming around again. Around the piano.

Balloon Strategy

JACK DEMPSEY brought to a close his campaign for the re-election of Mr. Roosevelt with a rousing intellectual demonstration at Newburgh, in the heart of the enemy country. Newburgh is close to the homes of Mr. Ogden Mills, the noted economic royalist, and Congressman Hamilton Fish, the Peter Pan of the House of Representatives, who always seeks office on a platform of "A Communist under every bed."

Mr. Dempsey and his troupe of political wrestlers from the herds of Jack Curley rolled down the Hudson River from Albany and Troy emitting strident blasts of logic and phonograph music from a loud speaker concealed in a trailer. They disbanded after one final convulsion of persuasion. Although the Republicans in the Newburgh region are known far and wide as the most obdurate political bigots in the United States, it was apparent that the wrestling show had finally cracked their hard outer shell and that Mr. Roosevelt would win the district with hardly a dissenting vote.

Mr. Mills is reported to have watched the wrestling with deep interest and to have said at the conclusion, "I learned something tonight. Never before have I seen the economic policies of Mr. Roosevelt presented as Mr. Tiny Roebuck expounded them. Why isn't he in the Cabinet?"

Mr. Fish countered stubbornly.

• • • •

THE CAMPAIGN wound up in the territory of Washington Irving's headless horseman, but the less said about the headless horseman the better. Mr. Roosevelt also lives in the vicinity, and some of his neighbors have had an unpleasant habit of referring to him as the headless horseman—meaning to suggest that he is a dictator and not entirely sound.

Inasmuch as Mr. Walter Lippmann and Henry (Hollow-Shell) Mencken have come out for Mr. Landon, your correspondent feels called upon to say that he is throwing his support to Mr. Roosevelt.

Looking back over the wrestling contests of the last few days under the auspices of the New York State Democratic organization and the Prize Fight Commission, it is impossible to come to any other conclusion . . . Nobody on the Republican side has dealt with the issues in the same way, and the challenge of the moist and hairy gladiators who struggled with the problems of America under Mr. Dempsey's chairmanship has not been met. Nobody has dared reply to the intellectual challenge of Count Otto von Zuppe, of Germany, who entered the ring in Schenectady wearing a monocle and a purple plush opera cape. The Republican organization has tried to answer with sunflowers the powerful truth laid before an enlighted community by Flower Johnston (colored), the light-heavyweight champion of Cuba.

• • • •

AND CERTAINLY the Republicans were at a terrible disadvantage when Mr. Dempsey, campaigning in sheer patriotism, stepped up to the microphone and said, "I am for Mr. Roosevelt because he is the friend of the workingman." It was another cross of gold.

It is to be hoped that Mr. Roosevelt will be reelected for Mr. Dempsey's sake, at least. Mr. Hearst is the workingman's foe, and there is no telling what day the Hearst Milk Fund may declare itself in for 10 per cent of the gross receipts of his restaurant and saloon, as often happened to the unhappy Garden Corporation. He may need all the protection a grateful President and Postmaster General can give him.

But it was not the fine, vigorous common sense of the wrestling or Mr. Dempsey's inspired oratory which convinced your correspondent; it was balloons. Mr. Dempsey's troupe distributed thousands of small white balloons on rubber leashes, which were punched with rapidity and skill by all members of the party to show the citizens how.

"Keep punching for Roosevelt," says the legend on the balloons.

Mr. Landon has no answer to the balloons. His national committee tried to steal the idea and seduce the manufacturer, but Mr. Dempsey prevented. So the wrestler's phase of the campaign closes on a happy symbolic note, with thousands of American citizens along the Hudson River valley socking one another over the head with bladders.

Gabrilowitsch Death

By William Lyon Phelps

Loss to Music.

The death of Mr. Ossip Gabrilowitsch was an unspeakable loss to the world of music; he was truly great both as an orchestra conductor and as a pianist.

I first met him almost exactly 25 years ago, in Munich, on November 22, 1911. He had been married only two years; and was preparing himself for a position as orchestra conductor. Comparatively speaking, there are only a few symphony orchestras in the whole world; thus, any man who seeks such a position is trying for something almost unattainable. But Mr. Gabrilowitsch was going through a course of training as definitely as if he had been planning to be an engineer or a lawyer.

• • • •

He was born in St. Petersburg, Russia, February 7, 1878. He won the Rubinstein Prize there when he was 16 years old. He began to give piano recitals at an early age, and early in this century he made various tours in America.

In 1918 he became conductor of the Detroit Symphony Orchestra, and also appeared as guest conductor in other cities, besides giving piano recitals during every season.

He was one of the greatest pianists in the world, both in technique and in expression; his skill was equaled by his intelligence and sympathetic understanding.

In later years I got to know him very well indeed, and his friendship I regarded as a great privilege. There was an extraordinary finesse about the man. He had what the Greeks called high seriousness. He had reverence for everything bautiful and noble; to hear him conduct Bach's "St. Matthew Passion" was a deeply religious experience.

• • • •

Mr. Gabrilowitsch could not endure anything silly or vulgar; he loved only what was best. Yet he was never ponderous or pedantic. He was full of fun, good humor, and unaffected cheerfulness.

He was well read in many languages; and I shall never forget the enlivening conversations I had with him.

Apart from his amazing talents as a musician, I can truthfully say he was one of the finest characters I have ever known.

Betting And Hedging

The scarcity of Landon money has undoubtedly helped to lengthen the betting odds in favor of Roosevelt, which at this writing are 12 to 5. Wall Street has seldom guessed wrong on a Presidential election. In 1916, however, the odds favored Hughes over Wilson, but the voters did not.

Slow betting this year is all the harder to explain in view of some of the attractive hedging available. One can lay a bet on Roosevelt, then hedge, and insure a profit by buying a call on low grade utility stocks which the street believes would be sure to rise if Landon should be elected. Republican betters on Landon hedge by accepting puts on the same low grade utility issues.

Observer In Nanking Urges Occident To Keep Eye On Growing Sino-Japanese Tension Resulting From Murders.

By Mark J. Ginsbourg.

Special Correspondence of The Post.

NANKING is living through anxious days. Lights burn late at the Waichiaopu, China's department of state, special emissaries scurry between here and Shanghai, officials confer and foreign observers once again speak darkly of China's "crucial hour." Meantime, as this is written to catch the mail boat, Nipponese men of war and naval reinforcements are being rushed here from Japan, and Japanese diplomatic officials deliver their daily quota of protests and demands to the Chinese authorities.

These developments come in the wake of a series of murders of Japanese nationals in various parts of China. On July 10 a youth, carrying a child in his arms, was shot in a dark alley in Shanghai. On August 24 two newspapermen were beaten to death by a mob in Chengtu, where the Japanese planned to open a consulate general, overriding Nanking's objections. On September 3 a drug store owner was disemboweled by soldiers in Pakhoi, on China's extreme south. On September 19 a Nipponese policeman was shot and killed in the Japanese Concession in Hankow. Only four days later a gang of Chinese gunmen killed a bluejacket and wounded two others in a busy Shanghai street.

No one in China, either among foreigners or in the official circles here, attempted to condone these murders. While the foreign newspapers in Shanghai openly voiced their sympathy with Japan, high government officials told me that they recognized their responsibility for the incidents and were ready to meet all reasonable demands for retribution.

The question thus hinges on what is to be regarded as "reasonable" demands. Tokyo, pointing wrathfully to the assassinations of its nationals is demanding a pledge that an end would promptly be put to the wave of terror. Simultaneously, it is taking advantage of the tension to secure a drastic readjustment of Sino-Japanese relations, on terms dictated by Japan.

WHEN less than ten days after the Chengtu murders, a Japanese was killed in Pakhoi and Nipponese officials were refused permission to land in the port to make an investigation of the crime, consternation in Tokyo gave place to fury and a perceptible stiffening of the demands. The press reported that the Navy, which was handling the settlement of the incidents, wanted an immediate dissolution of the Kuomintang and the stationing of troops in Pakhoi and Chengtu, "to protect the consulate general."

Public opinion in Japan also showed a distinct swing toward belligerence. Representatives of 18 militant patriotic organizations in Tokyo passed a resolution urging the government "to assume a positive and vigorous attitude toward China . . . so as to make the latter reconsider her anti-Japanese attitude for the sake of peace and order in the Far East."

But prudence prevailed over belligerence in Tokyo. While demonstrations of armed might were continued galore, the Japanese Ambassador Kawagoe was instructed to hold personal negotiations with Gen. Chiang Kai-shek, China's "strong man," on a general readjustment of Sino-Japanese relations, with especial emphasis on the recognition of the so-called "special status" of North China.

The Chinese officials, fully cognizant of Tokyo's interpretation of the innocent phrase, "general readjustment," took prompt steps to settle the incidents. The alleged ringleaders of the Chengtu murderous mob were instantly beheaded and offers were made to recompense the families of the murdered Japanese.

A high official of the Nanking Government, however, told me that the Japanese authorities disregarded these acts and sought, instead, to effect major changes in the nation's entire political organization.

"How can we," he said plaintively, "accept, for instance, the rumored demand for the dissolution of the Kuomintang? The party forms the backbone of the government. It brought the present administration into existence, and it would be suicidal for us to comply with such a demand, should it be made."

Nanking Seen Facing Greatest Test Since 1931.

NANKING, all foreign observers agree, is facing the greatest crisis of its career since September 18, 1931. It was on that date that the Tokyo braintrust stumbled upon the important discovery that no nation was willing to go to war to keep China's "open door" open. This discovery has since been utilized by the Nipponese army with monotonous regularity to establish the Oriental prototype of the Monroe Doctrine.

All signs seem to show that the present events have been chosen for the final test of the indifference of foreign powers to China's fate. The wave of assassinations has armed the Japanese ambassador with a convincing weapon in his negotiations with Gen. Chiang.

Japanese desires in China, speaking broadly, lie along the following lines: Nippon wishes to have a preferred position in the Chinese trade; she wants to have China's assent to her ambitious plans for the development of North China with Japanese funds; she seeks the end of all nation-wide organizations, which have been, or can be, used as centers of anti-Japanese feeling; and finally she wishes to be assured that in case of war with Russia, China would be a faithful and helpful ally.

To translate these desires into actuality, Mr. Kawago is expected to press for the acceptance of the following demands:

1. The lowering of the Chinese tariff on products of first necessity, such as cotton textiles, sugar, cigarette paper, artificial silk and other goods in the production of which Japan excels. Although such a reduction would automatically benefit other nations trading with China, Nippon's geographical proximity, coupled with cheap labor and political and military pressure, would give her an an immense advantage over her rivals.

2. Sino-Japanese co-operation in North China, which would find expression in the approval for the opening of new railways, mines, cotton mills, electric power plants and a recognition of the northern autonomy. Tokyo will also seek assistance in the transformation of the region into a gigantic cotton plantation, which would supply Nipponese mills with the badly needed raw material.

3. Immediate and actual termination of anti-Japanese activities; possibly a reorganization of the Kuomintang and a revision of textbooks.

4. Co-operation in the extermination of communism in China, possibly leading to Japanese military operations in North China. Probable pledge of support in a clash with the Soviets.

China Believed Unable To Ignore Japan's Demands.

THAT these terms will eventually be accepted by the Chinese Government cannot be doubted. For the past two years the Chinese diplomats have evaded compliance with the demands of the Nipponese army through endless negotiations, pledges of co-operation, friendly speeches and edicts threatening dire fate to the anti-Japanese elements. The recent murders have, however, probably for the first time, given the Tokyo government public backing in practically any steps it might decide to take to make China do its bidding.

Nor does China expect any foreign help in this hour of need. A very high official of the government, who is well qualified to voice the views of the Nanking administration, said to me:

"The Government realizes that the international situation is extremely favorable to the Japanese plans. Great Britain has her hands full with the European squabbles. Soviet Russia would never openly oppose Japan by helping China. The United States are preoccupied with the forthcoming Presidential elections, and President Roosevelt would take no step now that would prejudice his chances in the ballot-box battle. China is thus left to her own devices, which permit no opposition to Japan, unless the latter's demands deprive China of her sovereign rights."

An important feature of the situation is its possible effect on the destinies of Gen. Chiang. It is understood that under the terms of a compromise agreement, which brought to an end the recent controversy between the southern warlords and Nanking, he has given a pledge to oppose Nippon's imperial designs. The Japanese position now is, however, so determined that that even Gen. Chiang's undoubted diplomatic ability will not avail him.

On the other hand, an acceptance of the Japanese demands will immediately lead to a major internal crisis, seriously affecting Gen. Chiang's position.

The situation is tense and anything might be expected, from new murders to the landing of Nipponese marines in major Chinese cities. Americans would do well to take time off the elections to keep an eye on the Oriental drama.

November Near

An Editorial Review

As The Campaigns End.

HAVING WATCHED President Roosevelt pass its very doorsteps through a crowd so packed that two persons lost their lives in it, the Republican Boston Transcript commented on the Democratic nominee's visit to New England as follows:

In the sense that it attracted the people in record-breaking numbers it was perhaps a triumphal tour which the President made yesterday through Massachusetts. Yet now that it is over and the tumult and the shouting ended, the citizens of the State have no more knowledge than they had before of Mr. Roosevelt's objectives in the event of re-election, no answer at all to the many vital questions affecting the future welfare of their country—questions which have been posed to him not only by his Republican opponents but by such leading members of his own party as Alfred E. Smith, Bainbridge Colby, James A. Reed and John W. Davis. It is true that the President promised there would be no new taxes and that the budget would be balanced. But he started making these same pledges a little over four years ago, has made them periodically ever since and they are still unredeemed. They stand today the same mere scraps of paper into which the Roosevelt regime has torn the whole Democratic platform of 1932.

• • • •

President Roosevelt was correct in his statement at Worcester, Mass., on Wednesday night that all heads of families in this country with incomes of less than $26,000 pay a smaller income tax today than they would have paid on the same income in 1932. * * * But it cannot be gainsaid that much of the Administration's tax legislation has been conceived hastily and thrown together with political exigencies in mind. * * * It may be that with the election out of the way, the Roosevelt Administration will find it possible to approach the tax problem in a more realistic and intelligent fashion than it has done heretofore. Its tax policies are extremely vulnerable, for those policies have been formulated primarily with an eye to the election of November 3, and only secondarily with the welfare of the country in mind.

• • • •

MEANTIME, another Democratic paper, the Louisville Courier-Journal, had the following to say about the Republican nominee:

When Gov. Landon discusses foreign trade in its relation to agriculture he is pathetically muddled. In Albuquerque, N. Mex., he declared "the most important problem facing us is the recapture of our lost export markets." * * * The Kansas Governor says that foreign tariffs must be eliminated, but in the next breath he declares that our tariffs must be raised to protect the manufacturer and workman. In other words, he will remove retaliatory duties by adding new causes for retaliation. * * * Mr. Landon's confusion, however, is natural. He is carrying water on both shoulders. He carries the promise of greater export markets to the farmer, while carrying the promise of shut-out duties to the manufacturer. Perhaps he is to be pitied, because in pre-convention days he was reported to favor the reciprocal trade policy of the Roosevelt Administration as the only way of regaining our lost markets.

• • • •

Of an opposite conviction is the San Francisco Chronicle, Republican, which charges that the President "is on the run," arguing in part:

The tone of his speeches has been querulous and testy. He has compared himself with the great of history and tradition who have not been appreciated in their time. The President's attitude is that of a national savior who has been repudiated. His speeches have been all of a pattern. That pattern is that the world came to an end in March, 1933, and he re-created it. He has offered nothing constructive, he has met no issues, he has ignored all demands that he tell what his future program is. His statements on the national finances have been as reckless as his spending. And, finally, he has taken up the old demagogic cry of Wall Street and the conspiracy of wealth to defeat him * * * Mr. Roosevelt is showing the tactics of desperation. He is too shrewd a politician to use such tactics unless he realized that the situation is desperate.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips.

The Garble Sisters.

"What do you think of the election?"

"I dunno. It's too bad this Simpson issue entered into it."

"I don't think it will influence the voters. Any candidate has a right to go yachting with a lady if he wants to."

"I see where there's a lot of fuss over using phonograph records to show that the straw polls are unreliable."

"Yeah. One of the radio companies cut Henry Ford off the air because he used 'em when he came out for Hoover."

"Hoover ain't running."

"No, but when Henry sees anything vibrating he thinks it's running."

"Bryan has been dead for years."

"Well, so have some of those other Democrats."

• • •

"What did you think of Al Smith being egged in Terre Haute?"

"He never should have criticized the police chief out there the way he did."

• • •

"Things in Europe look worse, don't they?"

"They sure do, especially in Spain. What do you think of the situation there?"

"It looks pretty bad for the Spaniards. That's what comes of devaluing the guilder. Money should stay the same, regardless of the weather."

"Do you think Russia will interfere?"

• • •

"I see where Lou Gehrig has gone into the movies."

"Yeah; that plan to buy the Brooklyn club and make him manager fell through, I guess."

"What's he going to do in Hollywood?"

"All I know is that it's something about a trip around the world in the China Clipper."

• • •

"I read where some college president took a firm stand against players carrying flasks during the game."

"Say, what do you think of the case of King Edward and that Mrs. Ipswich?"

"I guess he likes her, all right."

Now it seems there is a bakery racket. Which may explain Ima Dodo's pronunciation when she asks, "how many yeggs do I use in an angel cake?"

Pennsylvania hunting licenses bear the footnote, "do not shoot at any object not in motion." There is just a chance it may be intended for the complete protection of WPA foremen.

American Colonists in Alaska Take Up Co-operative Farming

Total of 164 Families Now in Colonial Valley; Churches, Homes Being Constructed; General Store Reports 20% Trade Rise.

By the Associated Press.

Palmer, Alaska, Oct. 25.—The fields of Uncle Sam's pilgrims in the colonial Matanuska Valley have spanned the gap to modernity and today are the scene of intensive farming and dairying activities and a new co-operative program.

The colony is getting its roots deeper into the soil of permanency.

Four new families arrived over the week-end, making a total of 164 in the colony.

Three churches are under construction.

Six new homes will be completed by Christmas.

A creamery opened last week.

A matchery housing an 18,000-egg incubator will be completed by spring.

The "corporation" will have a laundry operating soon.

The general store reported a 20 per cent increase in business during the last six months over the previous six months.

More than 300 children are attending school.

The colony will have 140 barns completed by December 1.

Formation of a co-operative, part of the Federal Government's program, has been completed. It is the Matanuska Valley Farmers' Co-operative Association, owned and operated by colonists, and designed to broaden marketing conditions of future products and to increase productivity.

Each colonist is required to belong to the co-operative. All agricultural products will be handled through the co-operative.

During the last season the cultivation of all the hardier vegetables has been demonstrated in the valley. Radishes, turnips, kale, lettuce, carrots, parsnips, parsley, peas, cress, cabbage, cauliflower, potatoes, beets, onions and spinach were grown. Now many colonists are building hothouses so they can have these vegetables in early spring.

"I confidently expect the colony flocks to be multiplied by thousands within a few years," he said.

The Colony Theater Guild presented its first play last night.

There was an agriculture fair this month.

There are six active homemakers clubs.

The Palmer firemen will give a masked ball next Saturday and colonists will stage the floor show.

In the words of Carl Meiser, formerly of Saint Louis County, Minn.: "We colonists are making a living, paying our grocery bill and that is all most people do in the U. S."

Pacelli Is Greeted By Chicago Crowd; Fog Delays Plane

Chicago, Oct. 25 (AP).—Delayed by fog, the plane bearing Eugenio Cardinal Pacelli, Papal Secretary of State, landed at the municipal airport today at 5:45 p. m.

Braving a misting rain, a large crowd greeted Cardinal Pacelli, highest Catholic official ever to visit this country, as he stepped from the plane. He was greeted by George Cardinal Mundelein, Archbishop of Chicago, and other dignitaries of the church.

Tomorrow Cardinal Pacelli will visit the Seminary of St. Mary at Mundelein, Ill., and Loyola University of Chicago. He plans to fly to St. Paul, where the Most Rev. John Gregory Murray, Archbishop of St. Paul, will join the flying party.

The special plane, in which the visiting prelate is making his first flight, will then continue to San Francisco, Los Angeles, St. Louis and Cincinnati, completing the tour Friday.

An honorary degree of doctor of letters was conferred upon the cardinal this afternoon at Notre Dame University, South Bend.

Coughlin Predicts War, Dictatorship

Flint, Oct. 25 (AP).—Predicting war, the Rev. Charles E. Coughlin tonight said conflict would "make Roosevelt dictator and that's what the Tugwells and the rest of them have been working toward."

In an address here he asserted the New Deal was endeavoring to "drag the country into the League of Nations through the back door," predicting involvements because of which America would be unable to escape conflict.

Coughlin said that wages had not increased proportionately with the cost of living and asked, "are you satisfied with that New Deal?" His question aroused a chorus of shouted "noes" from an audience of workers in this industrial city gathered in a rally supporting the Presidential candidacy of William Lemke, Union Party nominee.

Pan-American Parley to Study CurrencyCurbs

Restrictions on Exchange Held Main Barrier to U. S. Exports.

By the Associated Press.

An effort to clarify exchange control problems in Latin-American countries detrimental to United States trade will be made at the inter-American conference at Buenos Aires in December.

Trade officials here said yesterday they considered exchange restrictions one of the chief barriers to increased commerce between North and South America and were studying possible means to eradicate or liberalize existing control systems.

Secretary Hull and State Department economic experts are expected to draft remedial recommendations for submission to the conference, it was said, but the form they will take has not yet been determined.

Price Fall Cut Income.

(A rapid fall in prices of raw materials exported by Latin America several years ago so curtailed income of some countries in relation to sums owed abroad to pay for imports, debt services and other purposes that extraordinary measures were impressed to prevent a gold export volume that would endanger internal currency stability. In an endeavor to maintain a balance in international payments, government control of operations in foreign exchange was established by a number of republics.)

The chief Latin-American nations which now have exchange control systems in operation considered detrimental to increased United States exports to them are Argentina, Chile, Uruguay, Paraguay, Bolivia, Nicaragua, and Eucador.

Has Licensing System.

Colombia now is operating a licensing system which, officials said, has a comparable effect on trade.

Improvement in general conditions last year, officials said, resulted in modification of the control in some countries, but in recent months—especially in Ecuador and Nicaragua—the trend has turned to tightening up of restrictions.

The trade pact signed with Brazil, officials said, has resulted in almost clearing up the frozen exchange question with that nation, and they are hopeful remedial agreements can be worked out with other nations.

Entente Trio Fears Italo-German Pact

Vienna, Oct. 25 (AP).—Political circles in the Little Entente were concerned tonight by the Italo-German agreement reached by Dictator Adolf Hitler in Germany in conversations with Count Galeazzo Ciano, Italian foreign minister.

(By the agreement, Italy and Germany will work together on the major problems of Europe, according to a communique issued in Rome.)

In Belgrade fear was expressed the Italo-German combination might exert pressure—probably economically—with the aim of preventing the entente's military and commercial consolidation. The Little Entente countries are Yugoslavia, Czechoslovakia and Rumania.

V. F. W. Calls Meeting For Capital on Jan. 5

Chicago, Oct. 25 (AP).—National officers of the Veterans of Freign Wars adopted a five-point "united front" program for veterans today and issued a formal invitation to three kindred organizations to join them in a meeting in Washington January 5, when the next Congress convenes.

The program was proposed by Bernard W. Kearney, of Gloversville, N. Y., commander in chief. It included: Adequate pensions for widows and orphans of veterans; adequate benefits for disabled veterans; more effective Federal, State, county and municipal employment and civil service laws; a peace program based on preparedness and taking the profit out of war; protection and "promotion of Americanism."

The invitation went to the national heads of the American Legion, Disabled Veterans of the World War and the United Spanish-American War Veterans.

Adm. Standley May Head New Marine Board

Due to Retire January 1, He Is Expected to Get Subsidy Law Job.

By the Associated Press.

Rounding out 45 years' active service, Admiral William H. Standley, chief of naval operations, is scheduled for retirement next January 1.

If unofficial predictions materialize, however, it will be some time before he can settle down to full retirement in his ocean beach home near San Diego, Calif.

President Roosevelt was described in some sources yesterday as wanting Admiral Standley to head the newly created Maritime Commission to administer the Government's merchant marine subsidy laws.

Informal discussion of his possible successor as the Navy's chief administrative officer centers upon Admiral William D. Leahy, who holds the second highest flag command in the fleet—commander of the battle force.

Two Weeks Past Age.

Standley will be just two weeks past the statutory age of 64 on New Year's Day, which compels all officers to relinquish active duty in the naval service.

Leahy, who is three years younger than Standley, once served as chief of the Bureau of Navigation. The appointment to fill Standley's post probably will be made soon by President Roosevelt.

During his three years as chief of naval operations Standley has been one of the driving forces behind the Administration's program to build the Navy up to full strength allowed by existing treaties and inaugurate after that an order system of warship replacement.

Helped Frame Bill.

He helped frame the Vinson-Trammell bill by which Congress authorized a building program designed to give the Navy by 1942 the full complement of ships and men to which it is entitled by present limitations treaties.

For several months this year, Standley was called upon to assume added responsibilities in the Navy Department because of the death of Henry L. Roosevelt, Assistant Secretary, and the prolonged illness of Secretary Swanson. He was Acting Secretary and Acting Assistant Secretary as well as Chief of Naval Operations for some months.

Born in Ukiah, Calif., on December 18, 1872, Standley was appointed to the Naval Academy in 1891.

D. A. R. Honors Colonial Hero In Lorton Rite

Fairfax County Chapter of Daughters of the American Revolution yesterday paid tribute to the memory of William Lindsay, Virginia colonial patriot and soldier.

Dedicatory services were held yesterday afternoon at Laurel Hill near Lorton, Va., for the new marker erected on his grave. William and Ellen Triplett, great grandchildren of Sarah Lindsay Tripplett, third daughter of William, officially unveiled the marker.

The principal address was made by R. Walton Moore, of Fairfax, Assistant Secretary of State, a direct descendent of the Lindsay family. He spoke of the service rendered this country by the Colonial patriots of Fairfax County and of conditions during the Revolutionary period.

The original Lindsay home is located on the Lorton Reformatory Reservation and is now the residence of Col. William Peak, reformatory superintendent. The Lindsay grave is located on the grassy knoll in front of the house. Through efforts of Mrs. Herbert Harr, D. A. R. historian, the burial place was located by Mrs. Theresa Davis who lived on the plantation as a child.

Capt. M. M. Barnard, superintendent of District penal institutions, welcomed the visitors and many descendants of the Lindsay family. Dr. Jessie Thornton Scott, regent of the Fairfax County chapter, presided. Mrs. Swan Sinclair, national president of the Children of the American Revolution, also spoke. The invocation was given by the Rev. Herbert A. Donovan, of Fairfax, and the benediction by the Rev. R. P. Nuttall, of Alexandria.

2,000 Stations Give Red Cross Aid to Autoists

Grayson Outlines Work, Says Volunteers Trained in Treating Injured.

One year after inauguration of the drive to eliminate death and injuries on the highways, the Red Cross has trained sufficient personnel and established 2,000 first aid stations on principal thoroughfares throughout the country, Admiral Cary T. Grayson, chairman, announced yesterday.

"These stations have been established at strategic points on busy highways and are staffed by volunteers who have undergone extensive training in the administration of first aid treatment to injured motorists," he said, in commenting on the annual report of the Red Cross, which has just been released.

Cites Traffic Toll.

He described how, when accidents in the vicinity of the first aid stations occur, the station attendants are able to get in touch with doctors or hospitals quickly, and have been trained in the proper handling of persons with injured limbs, cuts and abrasions, or possible internal injuries, until the doctor arrives.

"The Red Cross inaugurated its program of first aid to injured motorists and other users of our highways as a means of combating the frightful annual toll of motor vehicle accidents on the thoroughfares of the country," Admiral Grayson declared.

"It is shocking to realize that 35,000 persons are killed on highways each year, with an additional 1,250,000 persons receiving serious injuries. We firmly believe that the Nation should be up in arms against such a grim invader of our security and happiness."

Further carrying out the program of safety on the highways, Admiral Grayson described how the Red Cross has recently organized mobile emergency first aid units through the co-operation of such groups as State police, State highway departments, public service companies, and commercial companies operating carriers on highways.

Training Identical.

The drivers and personnel of such trucks or fleets of trucks are given the same training as that given personnel of the first aid stations, and vehicles under the charge of such drivers or personnel are marked by a Red Cross first aid sign.

"Within the next year we hope to have a much larger number of these stations as well as mobile units in operation on highways throughout the nation." Admiral Grayson said.

He declared also that new high records were set, during the year ended June 30, in all phases of the first aid and life saving program sponsored by the Red Cross. During that time, he pointed out, more than 460,000 men, women, and young people completed requirements in first aid or life saving and were given certificates for their work, while 20,000 volunteer instructors were used in providing instructions for this large number of persons.

Soldier Slays Pro-Japanese Chinese Leader

By the United Press.

Wuchang, China, Oct. 25.—Yang Yung-Tai, chairman of the Hupeh provincial committee and generally considered a sympathizer with Japan, was assassinated today by a Chinese army officer.

Wounded, Yang was taken to the Japanese hospital where he died. Six shots were fired, two taking effect.

His assassin, who would identify himself only as "Capt. Sheng," refused to disclose the reason for his act. He was arrested immediately by police.

Yang was returning from a visit with Paul R. Josselyn, the United States consul at Hankow, just across the Yangtze River from here, when he was attacked.

Observers were inclined to believe the assassination was inspired by political motives. Yang is generally considered as sympathetic with Japanese expansionist ambitions in China.

Tientsin, China (Monday), Oct. 26 (AP).—Thousands of Chinese residents in villages near here, where extensive Japanese military maneuvers began today, are evacuating their homes in fear of untoward incidents.

The Japanese arranged with the residents of the villages to billet 1,000 soldiers participating in the maneuvers and the Japanese requested that at least one member of each Chinese family remain, promising that no eventualities would occur.

FACTS ABOUT ONE-MAN CARS

THERE are 36 cities in America with a population of more than 250,000 each. In every one of these cities, except New Orleans, one-man street cars are in operation.

In twelve of these large cities, one hundred per cent of the street cars are one-man cars. In 21 of these cities, more than eighty per cent of the street cars are one-man operated.

One-man street cars are equipped with the best available safety devices. Records show one-man cars to be fully as safe, and often even safer, than two-man cars.

Use of one-man cars in Washington does not mean that men will lose their jobs with the Transit Company. In a growing city, such as Washington, there should be more and more jobs for street car and bus operators in the years to come.

An Orchid For George Price

WE feel we have a right to be proud of our men.

During the course of each day's efforts to give efficient, courteous service, they have to cope with many unusual situations. Some involve traffic, others involve people.

A few weeks ago, as George was operating through traffic, a woman passenger arose and, addressing the others in the car, demanded: "What do you suppose would happen to all of us if that motorman suddenly dropped dead?"

"I'll show you," said George, smiling and calm—and he released all contact with the controls.

Nothing happened, of course. Except that the car came to a smooth, quick stop.

Part of our every-day job is to provide for just such things as George's passenger was fearful about—to take every precaution for the safety and comfort of our passengers—and to inform them courteously when they do not understand.

6 Days Remain For Arlington Car Inspection

Less Than Half of County Autoists Have Complied, Citizens Are Warned.

Police last night warned residents of the county owning automobiles that but six days remain in which to have cars inspected as required by regulations of the State Motor Vehicle Department.

State Officer C. B. Presley reports that less than 50 per cent of the cars in Arlington County have been inspected.

Sergt. E. G. McDermott of the State police force said there will be no extension of time and that any person operating an automobile under Virginia registration next Sunday and after, without displaying the regulation sticker, will be subject to arrest.

There are 13 designated inspection stations in Arlington County, located in Rosslyn, Cherrydale, East Falls Church, Ballston, Clarendon and Arlington.

The University of Arlington, recently granted a charter by the State Corporation Commission, is now receiving applications from prospective stude...s for cultural and theological degrees. Classes will begin in February. Courses will also be offered for home study.

The offices of the univeristy, temporarily, are located in the new addition to the Clarendon Baptist Church. For the present classes will meet and lectures will be delivered in the new Sunday school building.

The university's first bulletin will be issued shortly, Dr. Charles Thomas Ball, president, said yesterday. It will explain in detail courses of study and degrees which will be given.

Discussing plans, Dr. Ball stressed the importance of home study courses, which will make regular university and theological degrees available for those unable to take or complete residence collegiate work in former years.

Dr. Ball said plans are to purchase a large tract of land and erect necessary buildings to carry on the work of a complete university.

Make Up a Murder, Order to Policeman

Denver, Oct. 25.—Police Sergeant Luke Parslow scratched his head today over the strangest order he ever received.

Seventeen men will enter the room November 2 to find a "body," evidence, and clews all scrambled together in a baffling "mystery."

"It will be their task to solve this 'crime' and the way they do it will have a bearing on their Civil Service rating," Capt. Wolf said.

Hotel Raleigh Modernization Is Under Way

$200,000 Repair Work Will Be Completed About Dec. 1.

The Hotel Raleigh, long one of the Capital's leading hotels, will be transformed and modernized, according to an announcement by Col. Curtis C. Schiffeler, general manager.

Work already has begun and it is expected that the new Raleigh will be complete about December 1. Approximately $200,000 will be spent.

The program calls for a complete refurnishing of all guest rooms and corridors. Wallpaper will be removed to be supplanted with light-painted walls. New furnishings in keeping with the decorative scheme will be installed. Carpets in the rooms also will be of modern design. Semi-indirect lighting fixtures, together with numerous other conveniences, will complete the change.

The public rooms also are in process of renovation. The ballroom, on the top floor of the building, has been completed in a soft color scheme, together with an indirect flexible lighting system. The back of the house, as well, will receive much renovation. Kitchens, pantries, service equipment and storage rooms have been painted and improved.

The most marked improvement in the Raleigh will be in the main dining room and lobby. The lobby will be decorated in a dignified modern manner, with teakwood veneer from floor to ceiling, broken by contrasting wainscoatings. The front desk will be set unobtrusively in the wall. The ceiling, which will be lowered, will be in soft green and silver recesses.

The main dining room, after its remodeling, will be known as the Pall Mall room. It is planned to make the Pall Mall room a gathering place for Washington society, and a policy of prominent "name" orchestras, together with other entertainment, will be followed. Soft rose and chromium are the colors of the room, being carried out in window draperies, wall banquettes and metal trim. The Pall Mall room will open late in November.

Alexandrians Warnedon Auto Inspection Date

State Police Call Attention to Penalty Attaching to Noncompliance.

Sergt. E. J. McDermott, of the Virginia State Police, in charge of semiannual inspection of automobiles, says that after the deadline October 31 all automobiles without the required inspection "sticker" will be subject to the penalty of a fine or possible jail sentence.

The Virginia Department of Motor Vehicles several years ago adopted the policy of semiannual inspections at specified service stations in an effort to cut down accidents, requiring checking of brakes, steering, windshield wipers and all mechanical parts affecting safe operation of vehicles. All defects must be corrected before the safety sign is issued to the car owner.

The Alexandria Branch of the Needlework Guild of America, of which Mrs. Effie L. Baggett is president, is asking prompt contributions, inasmuch as the guild is anxious to be prepared to aid unfortunate persons who will require warm clothing as winter advances. A date for the annual display of articles collected will be announced early in November. Membership in the organization is the gift of two new garments or cash with which to buy them.

A colored unit has recently been organized, under leadership of Mrs. Margaret Evans. This unit will display its work November 12 in Roberts' Chapel.

Speaker Urges Palestine Jews, Arabs Alliance

Leaders of 2 Groups Must Co-operate, Samuel Says in Local Lecture.

Maurice Samuel, Jewish author and lecturer, last night urged close co-operation between Jewish and Arab leaders as the only way to end disorder in Palestine.

Samuel was speaking at the Jewish Community Center in the first of the National Jewish Forum winter lecture series. He returned only a few days ago from a six-month visit to Palestine.

His experience during the rioting there, Samuel said, had taught him the bulk of the Arab population had no grievance against the Jews, but was incited to attacks by wealthy Arab landowners.

Until the Zionist movement started pouring Jewish refugees into the Holy Land, the great mass of the Arabs eked out a share-cropping existence on the large estates, Samuels said. Arrival of large numbers of Jews brought money into the country and also raised the standard of living.

As a result, landowners, afraid their serfs would become uneasy, aroused their religious animosities and stirred them on to attack the newcomers, the speaker declared.

The situation has been further complicated by immigration into Palestine of large numbers of Arabs from other Arabian countries. Since the war, Samel stated, the Arab population has increased nearly 500,000, being now around 900,000.

Embassy Party Honors Riding Teams' Members

By Jessie Ash Arndt.

The cordial spirit which prevails where friends are still greeting each other after vacations away from the city was present yesterday at the reception given by the Ambassador of Chile, Senor Don Manuel Trucco, in honor of the Chilean, Mexican and United States teams participating in the Inter-American Horse Show. It seemed as though almost everyone in diplomatic and Army circles was there.

The ambassador's eldest daughter, Senorita Marta Trucco, received with him. Senorita Graciela and Senorita Rebeca assisted in the dining room. Senorita Marta Trucco wore bright blue and Senorita Rebeca, a frock of the same shade, while their sister chose a dark plum-colored costume.

The guests were received in the hall where the walls are covered with red brocade and the floor and stairway carpeted in red of the same shade. Large dahlias of a corresponding color were arranged in bouquets there and in the drawing room, where they were brought into striking contrast against the walls of white brocade. In the dining room, where the buffet table was set, a bouquet of great rose-colored dahlias formed the centerpiece.

Members of the teams in whose honor the party was given were necessarily among the later arrivals as they had to complete their exhibition at the Meadowbrook show grounds before they could come. All of them spoke with regret of having to leave Washington after their pleasant stay in the Capital, but the Chilean and United States Army teams were looking forward to their Madison Square Garden appearance.

Col. Jonathan M. Wainright, commandant of Fort Myer, was there with Mrs. Wainright, accompanied by Mrs. J. Tupper Cole, who has been their guest and who will go to New York with Maj. Cole, captain of the United States Army team, today. Col. and Mrs. Wainright will also have as their guest this week Mrs. Guy Henry, wife of Gen. Henry, former commandant of Fort Myer and now commandant of Fort Riley, Kans. Mrs. Henry, who has been visiting her daughter, Mrs. Howze, at Fort Oglethorpe, Ga., will remain here while Gen. Henry attends the Horse Show in New York.

Nearby were the Ambassador of Mexico, Senor Dr. Don Francisco Castillo Najera, in conversation with the Ambassador of Cuba, Senor Dr. Guillermo Patterson y de Jauregui, and Dr. Leo S. Rowe, Director General of the Pan American Union. The Mexican Ambassador was accompanied by Senora de Castillo Najera, their daughter, Senorita Erma Castillo Najera, and niece, Senorita Lupe Davila, and the Ambassador of Cuba by his daughters, Mme. Ernest Schlatter, with Mr. Schlatter, and Miss Olga Patterson, both of whom were assisting during the afternoon. The Ambasasdor of Brazil was there also, and when he left, dismissed his car to walk home with his secretary, Senor Decio de Moura.

Sacasas at Party.

The former President of Nicaragua and Mme. Sacasa and their daughter, Senorita Maruca Sacasa, were also among the guests, as were the Counselor of the Chilean Embassy and Senora de Mendoza, the Naval Attache and Senora de Althaus, the latter wearing a striking costume of black, a little bow of blue velvet trimming the front of the dress, and fox furs; Senor and Senora de Ulloa and Senorita Vega, here with the delegation for the Peruvian-Ecuadorean boundary conference; Senor and Senora de Mantilla-Ortega, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Burke, she in black velvet; Mrs. Alice Torrey Griffith, in henna velvet with brown accessories and hat trimmed with mink; Capt. David Erskine, Mrs. F. K. Reybold, in black with cream-colored lace trimming the neck; Miss Marion Reybold and Capt. John Reybold.

The Chilean Air Attache and Senora de Puga, Mme. Lombard, wife of the French Miltiary Attache, in gray with platinum fox collar, and Baroness Bon Below, in gray with a black velvet hat trimmed with ostrich plumes.

Just returned from a two-month visit in Europe was Mr. Otakar Kabelac, First Secretary of the Czechoslovakian Legation. He went abroad last summer at the time the former Minister, Dr. Ferdinand Veverka, and his family sailed, and spent some time with them in Vienna, and also with Dr. Veverka in Geneva, where he represents his country as delegate to the League of Nations as well as serving as Minister to Austria.

The Minister of Guatemala and Senora de Recinos and their daughter were among the guests who arrived during the latter part of the function. The Minister of Siam and Mme. Rajamaitri also were there.

Dr. Najera Host To Horse Teams At Embassy Fete

By Marylyn Reeve.

The Mexican Ambassador, Senor Dr. Francisco Castillo Najara, has had nothing but crowded hours since his return from Mexico Saturday. Arriving here at 10 a. m. he made a call on the State Department, presented medals and decorations, went to the horse show, then to the afternoon round of cocktail parties before the dinner dance at the Carlton. Yesterday also was filled with engagements, the climax being the gay party at the embassy in honor of the teams.

Informality marked the occasion. The Ambassador and Senora de Castillo Najera, with their daughter, Senorita Erma, and niece, Senorita Lupe Davila, greeted the guests at the door of the central salon. The hostess was wearing a tailored gown of black crepe, studded with rhinestones at the neck. Senorita Erma had on a quaint frock of violet blue changeable taffeta. Her cousin was in scarlet.

Throughout the halls, with their gay murals depicting Mexican life, the guests gathered in little groups and talked over the show. In the ballroom there was dancing. Senor Dr. Rafael Fuentes and Senora de Mantilla-Ortega, the latter in gold moire, were the first to dance. At the doorway, Gen. Azcarate, Capt. Eduardo Yanez, of the Chilean team, and Capt. Armando Villareal and Senor Juan Davila, brother of the hostess, talked shop, pausing now and then in their discussions to watch the dancers.

After fleeting minuts of dancing, the great doors of the dining room were opened revealing the artistic and elaborate buffet supper awaiting the guests. There were all sorts of colorful salads, platters of meats and sandwiches, cakes and everything one could thing of. Meanwhile, small Guilermo Castello Najera thoroughly disappointed that there was no opportunity for him to act on the stage as at the last embassy party, sat a forlorn little figure on a brocaded divan in the hall regarding the paintings seriously and refusing to speak to anyone.

After supper there was more dancing and the party continued in the usual jolly, informal way for which the affairs at the Mexican Embassy are famous.

Sons Hold Parley.

While their elders made merry the Ambassadors young sons, Francisco, Luis and some of their friends slipped off to the offices downstairs to talk quietly together.

Two ladies in red, Senora de Puga, wife of the Air Attache of the Chilean Embassy, and Senora de Yanez, sat on the edge of the stage in the ballroom, talking together. Among those dancing were the Counselor of the Cuban Embassy, Dr. Baron, and Senora de Gauchalla, who was in black lace; Maj. Arthur Thayer and Senora de Palmer, in black crepe with red and white brilliants at the shoulders; Senor Siri, of the Chilean Embassy, and Senorita Maruca Sacasa, wearing maroon lace; Mr. Edward Kulikowski, of the Polish Embassy, and Senorita Lutecia Quintilla; Mr. Ernest Schlatter, Attache of the Swiss Legation, and Senora de Huneeus; Mme. Schlatter, wearing a dark red skirt and beige tunic, dancing with the Attache of the Cuban Tmbassy, Senor Jose Maria de Lasa.

Others on the floor were Lieut. Henri Luebbermann and Senorita Elena Garduno Pombo, wearing black taffeta; Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Burke, the latter in black taffeta; Col. and Mrs. Millikin, Col. J. Tupper Cole and Mrs. Harold Chamberlin, in gold and black, Senor Don Hector Leguizamon, and Senorita Marguerita Montero, who was wearing pale blue satin.

Other guests included the Ambassador of Chile, Senor Don Manuel Trucco and his daughter, Senorita Marta Trucco, in gold brocade; Mrs. Guillermo Lewis, the Ambassador of Cuba, Maj. and Mrs. James Duke, Maj. and Mrs. Frank L. Whittaker and daughter Miss Jane Whittaker, Col. and Mrs. Jonathan M. Wainright, Senor Mantilla-Ortega; the Air Attache of the Chilean Embassy, Commander Puga; the Counselor of the Mexican Embassy and Senora de Quintanilla, Mr. Robert Robzar, Senorita Theresa Corrado, Senor Fernando Illanes and Senor Carlos Blanco.

Charming Children in Washington's Very Youngest Set

Harris & Ewing.

It will be some years before these little folk take their places as beaux and belles in Capital society, but still there are birthday parties and tea parties and perhaps there will be some Halloween parties, too, where hair ribbons rather than hats and knee-length skirts rather than trains will be worn by the very young ladies who attend. Little Miss Gracia Saint and her sister, Yolande, daughters of the Third Secretary of the French Embassy and Mme. Saint, are shown at the left. Below are Alice and Joe Cheesborough, children of Mrs. Millard Tydings, wife of Senator Tydings, Maryland.

THE MERRY WHIRL by MARYLYN

Washington will be a terribly quiet place—for a time at least—now that the Inter-American Horse Show is a thing of the past. For the last four days life has been one hectic—but delightfully so—round of shows, cocktail parties, dinners and informal gatherings.

The Dominican Legation was the scene of a gay crowded party, when the Pastorizas entertained in celebration of President Trujillo's birthday. The mammoth drawing room, only slightly smaller dining room and good sized den were filled with persons who had just come from the third session of the horse show, and all of them were wondering how they could possibly take in all of the afternoon parties and still reach the Carlton in time for the banquet.

Mme Pastoriza is one of these lucky souls who can do her "hostessing" with the minimum effort and really have a good time at her own parties. Son Andres was home from his studies especially for the party and not looking in the least fatigued in spite of his high grades. Marguerita Montero, in black, had one of the largest orchids we have seen. On the buffet table were large platters of unusual cakes and what not. As usual the empanadas were eagerly sought after by every one. These spicy, meaty little concoctions that resemble fried oysters are really delicious. Running them a close second were the giant ripe olives stuffed with cheese and bacon.

There were tea and coffee and, of course, peppy Dominican punch, while in the den, where the gentlemen were wont to gather, were the "makins" for whatever drink their fancy dictated.

Saw the Abbott Maginnises for the first time in too long a while, and she was swathed in furs and keeping up her reputation of good looking but daring hats, with one tucked and twisted into modish lines.

• • • •

The people who went to the Pastorizas first in their round of places to go, found they lingered on and on and were quite unable to tear themselves away for the next call.

Another delightful party the same afternoon was given by the Chilean Air Attache and Senora de Puga in their apartment at 2540 Massachusetts avenue. The petite hostess was in silver lame with jade green cords at the neck.

Glancing about the rooms, one observed there were many, many uniforms. With the three teams present in their military attire it was like a miniature diplomatic reception at the White House, so much braid and medals. But there was another type of uniform, medium blue and worn by the four young aviators from Chile who are in town for a time. They came up a few days ago and, on November 15, will fly a fleet of new planes back to their homeland. Speaking of uniforms—the dinner dance at the Carlton certainly had its share of them. Why, the shimmering satins, rich velvets and brilliant lames of the feminine guests couldn't hold a candle to the costumes worn by the gentlemen. The Mexicans, out in their full dress were in dark blue with light blue collars and gold decorations; the Chileans were in a light blue with gold epaulets, and striped ribbons across their chests. Of course, our own military men were in their best blues, the cavalry having yellow lapels on theirs, and an occasional Field Artilleryman with red, and the infantry with pale blue. Gen. John Philip Hill, as special representative of the Governor of Maryland, was a handsomely attired individual in his dark blue and countless gold buttons, ribbons and medals. His aid, whom we did not know, was in gray with more gold than deserves mentioning. In other words, the party was on the gold standard.

Suzanne Hill and Phillips Huntington Clarke, whose wedding will take place in Baltimore Saturday afternoon, were there with her father. She had on a bright bluish green chiffon gown with graceful trailing scarfs.

Back to the Pugas' party—making their debut at Washington affairs were the new Chilean Consul in Baltimore, Senor Javier Urrutia, and his pretty, young wife, both of whom speak English flawlessly, in spite of but two months in this land.

• • • •

Both Alfaro families were there. The former Minister of Panama and Senora de Alfaro, the latter in soft deer brown; and tiny Mme. Alfaro, wife of the Ambassador of Ecuador, (he is now at West Point visiting the boys, Jaime and Eloy, jr.), who had with her yesterday, her sister, Senora de Sosa.

Musical Group To Fete Sponsor

Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Will Be Honored on Birthday.

Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, often called the "fairy godmother of chamber of music and of chamber musicians," will come, October 28, from Cambridge, Mass., to be present at the special program at the Library of Congress held each year in honor of her birthday, October 30.

The Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation for the promotion of chamber music is a unique institution. In 1929 Mrs. Coolidge transferred the annual festivals from her home in Pittsfield, Mass., to the Library of Congress. An auditorium was built specially within the Library and is acoustically one of the most perfect of its kind. The concerts held there through the years since 1929 have made an unparalleled contribution to the art of music in America.

In 1935, Mrs. Coolidge received the Order of the Crown from the Belgian government for her efforts in musical development there.

Each year a special program is given in the Library of Congress auditorium for her on her birthday. Later that day she will entertain at 2400 Sixteenth street, where she has an apartment.

Society yesterday was torn between closing events of the Inter-American Horse Show and the opening program of the National Symphony Orchestra in Constitution Hall. Both drew large gatherings of distinguished Washingtonians.

The symphony began its season with the first of its series of afternoon concerts. Hans Kindler, founder and conductor, was welcomed with the warm enthusiasm which was both the greeting to a friend and the expression of appreciation for his contribution to music in the Capital.

Tito Schipa, tenor of the Metropolitan Opera, who was guest soloist, charmed his entire audience but perhaps none enjoyed his singing more than the newly arrived envoy of his country, the Ambassador of Italy and Signora Survich. They had with them in their box the Naval Attache of the Italian Embassy and the Marchioness of Sant'Orsola, and all listened with evident pleasure.

Troyanovskys Present.

In a box nearby, the Ambassador of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and Mme. Troyanovsky, Mme. Oumansky, wife of the Counselor of the Embassy, and Oleg, the Troyanovsky's young son, were enjoying the music. Mme. Troyanovsky wore a black wrap with an ermine collar and a hat with two glazed feathers crossed in front. Mme. Oumansky was in a black crepe dress, trimmed in front with a white silk corded bow, and wore a black hat.

Well to the back of the hall, in another box, sat Mrs. Walter Bruce Howe, better known to the musical world as Mary Howe, one of whose compositions was presented for the first time at yesterday's concert. It was "Spring Pastoral" opening number after the intermission, and, despite continued applause and the turning of heads by an audience which desired to pay tribute to the composer, she remained in the background.

She was wearing a tailored costume of brown and was in conversation during the intermission with Rear Admiral and Mrs. Emory S. Land. With her in her box were Mrs. R. H. Dunlop, who wore a black suit with silver fox collar and bands on the sleeves, and Miss Anne Hull, in a gown of rust crepe with a brown hat. Miss Hull, who has been Mrs. Howes' partner in two-piano work for several years, had come from New York City to hear her "Pastoral" played by the symphony, and was her guest for the week-end.

Albertinis Attend.

Dr. and Mrs. Oscar Albertini also were in the audience, Mrs. Albertini in beige and brown with a felt hat. Mrs. C. Augustus Simpson was there, in a gown of black crepe and chiffon, with a baum martin scarf. Another who was enjoying the music was the Rev. Meade Bolton MacBryde, also Juan Tomadelle.

With Mr. Arnaldo Conti Berenguer was his mother, Mme. Amelia Conti, solo harpist of the Metropolitan Opera, who is visiting in Washington, and who went back to greet Signor Schipa following the concert. He was surrounded by a group of young college girls whose programs he was obligingly autographing.

Plans had been made for informal entertaining in his honor last evening following his appearance, but he was obliged to return to New York City to complete details of an engagement which was made during his brief time in Washington for a series of concerts in Japan and Australia. He will leave in June for the Far East.

Signor Schipa, altnough he did not take time to be guest at a party, did attend a very brief reception at the request of two young girls from Trinity College, the Misses Frances Maggioni and Ann Kelly, who extended an invitation to him to come there and meet Sister Agnes, dean of their school, and the large group of girls who were gathered to welcome him. He accompanied them to Trinity.

New Foundation Garments Are Key to Smart Current Modes

By Ethel Ehlen.
The Post Fashion Editor.

SCULPTURED grace is the theme of the season But, your frocks cannot have the well-fitted lines and smart silhouette of the current mode unless, beneath it all, there is a perfect fitting foundation garment. Due to the revolutionary changes in fashion, foundations of last season simply can't be worn with this season's clothes successfully.

The new foundations are long, slim, high and give perfect body control usually without benefit of stays. They are surprisingly light in weight—a drastic change from the heavy-boned affairs of past years. Regardless of how thin you are, a foundation garment of some kind is absolutely necessary. An uncorseted figure is slovenly, even though groomed in the latest dictates of fashion.

To wear with suits, there is a clever new girdle, 14 or 16 inches, with high waistline—to give a slenderizing silhouette and prevent the skirt band from cutting the waistline. The front panel is satin with zipper closing; the sides are two-way stretch lastex; the back panel has an up and down stretch only. There is concealed boning beneath the front panel, which may be removed if not needed.

For an unbroken line, the brassiere of lastex may extend down and over the top of girdle; in any event, it must be of the high, uplift type. The importance of good figures to offset form-fitting fashions this season has inspired a new technique in brassieres—they now come in alphabet size (a, b, c, d) as well as numbers, to perfectly fit small, average, large and very large busts.

Because 65 per cent of all women are short (five feet four inches or less), there has been designed the half-size corselette, an all-in-one garment. Figures in this category usually fall into three types: average bust and hips and short waist; average bust, short waist and long full hips; top-heavy bust, short waist, straight hips. The half-size foundations take care of each type; they have the same appearance, although the proportions are vastly different. A special secret pattern grading from the smallest to the largest size is used in each group.

Designed especially for evening, although it may be worn with daytime frocks also, especially period-influenced afternoon clothes, is a sheer net lastex foundation, appropriately called the veil-of-youth. There is no boning whatever in this garment, control being achieved through cut alone. Back and front panels of satin lastex stretch up and down only, flattening and flattering the figure; the sides stretch both ways. It is surprisingly light in weight, but gives maximum control and slimness to the figure.

For the college girl or woman of exceptionally slim, youthful figure, there are mere wisps of girdles, of lastex with no bones or zippers. The front and back panels don't stretch, the sides, two-way stretch. There is also a junior corselette with lace brassiere; of the two-way, one-way lastex type, with back zipper closing. The unusually stout figure, also has been considered. For this type, a foundation has been designed with inside adjustment for stomach and bust. It is built on the smart Empire lines, just as the foundation garments for slim and average figures.

This girdle was designed especially to wear with suits; note the high waistline. The sides are two-way stretch lastex; front panel, satin. Brassiere is lastex-satin and lace.

Designed for evening, but also appropriate for afternoon wear, is the foundation garment above of sheer net lastex. Back and front panel of satin lastex stretch up and down only, flattening and flattering the figure. There is no boning, control being achieved through cut alone. This garment may be dyed in any of the smart costume colors to match your evening gown; this, by the way, is a high-fashion note this season.

A Woman's NEW YORK

By Alice Hughes.

New York, Oct. 25.

ALICE HUGHES.

AS YOU MAY have noticed, this brief and slightly breathless notebook has sedulously avoided politics, which is practically none of its business. At the same time it is quite permissible to note, as the present campaign draws to a close, that our lady friends here have been in it up to the knee-caps and have come off with varying degrees of success and esteem.

Veteran members of the political sisterhood have sat quietly in their clubhouses and put their greying heads together sagely, but the young girls, the fire of battle in their well-mascara'd eyes, have taken the fight right out in the streets to the pee-pul, with some strange and fearsome results. Some of them have even been martyrs to their particular cause. One sound truck, loaded with beauteous society zealots, boldly went into enemy territory, and though they were greeted with a frightful barrage of elderly tomatoes, they tried to shout the good word above a roar of native Bronx cheers and retreated safely—their pretty heads juicy, but unbowed.

A visitor to this sprawling settlement is horribly confused about the way things are going. If she visits a newsreel theater on the upper East Side, she hears a candidate greeted with such roars of angry hatred that he might be wearing hooves, horns and a swishing tail. Precisely three blocks west the same camera shot, in another newsreel cubicle, will be hailed with such shouts of love that the man might be tossing twenty-dollar bills at the customers from the screen.

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—Gosh, how I hate to see this golden month go—the most glorious and most livable this town knows! It always seems to me that winter is wintrier here, and summer summerier—or do you all feel the same way?

The society girls keep right on singing in local night dives, in spite of the hollering of local professionals. One of them, Eve Symington, is said to be collecting no less than $1,200 every Saturday night. That ought to feed a few Pekes!

I wonder if George Palmer Putnam, Amelia Earhart's spouse and founder of the "Only Their Husbands Club," was at the pier to meet Viscount Astor, husband of the ebullient Lady Nancy? . . . Lingering briefly on the British peerage note, our sex has taken a whopping from Hollywood, where we have always done right well, in one way or another. Here's the beautiful Earl of Warwick out there with a movie job at a thousand a week, while his no less beautiful estranged countess, Rose, failed to click and has gone back to England—thus keeping 6,000 miles, wet and dry, between them! . . .

Pattern 5720.

"MADONNA AND CHILD"—how near and dear to our thoughts at Christmas time! What a handsome gift this striking wall panel will make, embroidered in softly colored wool or silk floss. For all its beauty, it requires but little time to complete; it's done mainly in single stitch, and you know how easy that is. The finished result is one that will prove decorative in whatever room it's hung. In pattern 5720 you will find a transfer pattern of a wall hanging 14x18 inches; a color chart; material requirements; illustrations of all stitches needed; directions for finishing wall hanging.

To obtain this pattern send 10 cents in stamps or coin (coin preferred) to The Washington Post, Household Arts Dept., 259 W. 14th Street, New York, N. Y. Be sure to write plainly your name, address and pattern number.

The GENTLER SEX . . .

By Malvina Lindsay.

Lady Candidate—An Interview.

"MRS. BABB, I understand that you began life as a poor girl——"

"Oh, no, no, no! My great-grandfather was a large slaveholder. He was a Doodlebopp—you know the Virginia Doodlebopps—there were three brothers of them settled in this country."

"Then am I to understand, Mrs. Babb, that you did not work your way up in the world?"

"Yes—and no. When I was left a young widow with 11 children, I stepped out into the business world and accumulated a modest fortune."

"To what do you attribute your great success?"

"To feminine intuition. I sensed that the world needed a new type of noodle. I invented it—the Babb Non-Elastic Noodle."

"Tell me something about yourself, Mrs. Babb. Is it true that, in spite of all your wealth, you are plain as an old shoe?"

"Well, not exactly. But you can say for me that I am simply mad about Balinese pottery and Graeco-bucolic comedy and am a student of the New Rhythm philosophy. I restore old houses, collect antiques—I I have a perfectly marvelous collection of highboys that I picked up for little or nothing at an auction——"

"Just a minute, Mrs. Babb. I take it then that you are an outstanding example of American womanhood?"

"Absolutely. For the first three days after I get a permanent I can't do a thing with it. I am also on a diet—it's a perfectly wonderful system. I took off 17 pounds in——"

"Mrs. Babb, would you mind first telling me your platform?"

"Not at all. I believe in youth. I don't think youth has had a square deal. I also believe in middle age. I don't think middle age has had a chance. I am also for old age. I've always loved old people——"

"Then I take it Mrs. Babb, you are honest as the day is long."

"Exactly. I am 100 per cent American. I love Old Glory. I always knit two rows, when I should purl one. I always tell my partner in a bridge game how she should have bid. I am a garden lover, a book reviewer and at various times in my life I have been a vegetarian, a Neo-Nudist——"

"Then I assume of course, Mrs. Babb, that you love to fish?"

"No, but you can say for me that I am terribly nervous at times and that I have sinus trouble. I am also letting my hair grow and it is simply a fright. I have had three operations. The last time I was on the operating table——"

"May I quote you, Mrs. Babb, to the effect that you are a lover of kiddies?"

"Absolutely. I also raise Pekingese. And whatever you do don't forget to put down that I write poetry. I've published several volumes of my own verse. By the way I have a little thing here with me you might like to print. It just came to me this morning——"

"Just a minute, Mrs. Babb, what about your picture?"

"Picture! Oh, I couldn't think of having my picture in the paper! However, if you run anything, be sure you take the profile. The one with the halo. And the brown finish. Say, maybe I'd better look over the proofs——"

"Pardon me, Mrs. Babb, but it is getting late and I understand you are to address the Men's League for Decency in Government tonight——"

"Tonight! Not tonight! I couldn't possibly!

"No! Why not!"

"I haven't a thing on earth to wear!"

Wool Dresses Feature Trimmings of Velvet

Paris (U.P.).—Velvet is frequently combined with wool—not only for daytime but for cocktail and dinner hour as well. Fine woolens or soft broadcloths are used for tailored street dresses, trimmed with high velvet collars, deep cuffs and wide belts. More formal are the broadcloth suits with long straight skirts, velvet blouses and broadcloth coats made with velvet revers, cuffs and buttons.

Simple Black Is Chic.

Paris (U.P.).—Black, simple and smart, is the traditional shade for the chic Parisian and is usually relieved by touches of white. Bright red, green, turquoise and a bright royal blue are used this year to offset dead black.

Today's HEALTH TALK

Keep on the Acid Side.

A few days ago we had something to say about stones which sometimes form in the kidneys and the bladder in perfectly normal individuals. It was noted that any interference with the usual outflow of urine would predispose to the formation of calculi. In other words, salts (calcium, phosphorus, etc.) will settle out more readily if a puddle of urine is permitted to accumulate in the kidneys or in the bladder.

It is much like the layer of lime that may form on the bottom of a teakettle. If the water evaporates minerals are thrown down (precipitated) which otherwise would remain in solution. We can illustrate this easily by dissolving a teaspoonfull of common salt in a glass of water. The fluid is perfectly clear. Allow the tumbler to stand for several days. The water will evaporate slowly and salt crystals will appear along the sides and at the bottom of the glass. The same situation applies to urine which may hold in solution more solid matter than normal—too much for the liquid to retain.

Sometimes what we term the "reaction" is a matter of great importance. For example, a liquid that is slightly acid may be able to dissolve large quantities of chemicals which it could not hold were it slightly alkaline. This is the case with the urine. Whenever it becomes alkaline, precipitation of its mineral content is far more likely. For this reason nature has decreed that the urinary output of man should be slightly acid. A poorly balanced diet can change it to the alkaline side.

A fairly common cause of alkaline urine may be the pernicious habit of taking alkalis when the spirit moves. No one should use large quantities of bicarbonate of soda on his own initiative. If it is prescribed by a physician there is probably a reason. Meats help to keep the urine acid and one moderate helping each day will be sufficient in most cases.

A group of workers in a clinic in Cleveland report that through the use of a high vitamin and acid mineral diet, which they have employed routinely, they have been able to prevent the development of stones following operative procedures. Furthermore, that a considerable number of individuals who previously produced repeated crops of these concretions have been entirely free for the past two years. This calls to mind the recent suggestion that the deposit of minerals takes place whenever there is a deficiency of vitamin A in the diet.

Overactivity of the parathyroid glands will lead to an excess output of their secretion and hence to the extraction of lime from the bones and a resulting increase in calcium in the blood.

Entertaining At Hotel Holds No Problems

Hostesses Are Advised to Observe Same Rules as at Home.

By Margaret Wallace.

MANY Washington hostesses who entertain at clubs and hotels bring their problems to this department. They seem most worried about the formal or informal status of an entertainment that is not given in their own home.

The answer to this problem is a very simple one. When the entertainment is given in a private room in a club or hotel it is conducted exactly the same as if it were given in a home. Formal dinners and luncheons are given in hotel and club dining rooms, but as a rule hostesses at such formal parties like to have a room or suite to themselves.

When club or hotel reception rooms are used for a reception, tea or musical, the hostess presides over this temporary domain in exactly the same manner she would at her home.

Guests should conform to the same rules of good form when they are attending a party in a club or hotel as they would attending one at a home.

A group of young people was guilty of unpardonable rudeness at a hotel tea dance recently. They came in, danced a bit, then went to the public dining room of the hotel to drink cocktails and then returned to the party, repeating this performance frequently during the afternoon. The hostess had provided refreshments for her guests. The dining room could be seen and the hilarity of the young people could be heard from where the hostess stood receiving her guests and she was much embarrassed. These young people told other people in the dining room that they were attending the tea dance across the corridor, but that they liked to slip out by themselves between dances. They made their return to the party very evident each time.

QUERY. I am giving a supper after an afternoon musicale in a public auditorium at one of the clubs. The supper is to be a buffet one. The guests will not have time to change their costumes between the concert and the supper. Do you think I could wear a more formal afternoon costume then I would ordinarily wear to a concert since I am to be the hostess at a supper immediately following? Of course I have a box and will entertain some of the important guests in it during the concert. Shall I wear a hat?

ANSWER. It will be quite proper to wear a formal afternoon costume at the concert. You must wear a hat at the concert, since it is a public place. It would be proper to take your hat off for the supper. Since the guests will be in afternoon costumes with hats it will also be proper to keep your hat on.

QUERY. Is it proper for my son and daughter to entertain at dinner in the dining room of a club? They wish to have only young people in their party and to dispense with a chaperone of any kind. They will stay quite late for the dancing. They claim other young people do this.

ANSWER. It is not considered good form for young people to give a dinner and dance in a public place without some kind of a chaperone. Many of the modern young people do it, however, without much comment. Many mothers regard a dinner given jointly by a brother and sister as quite proper without a chaperone even in a public place.

MARY HAWORTH'S MAIL

"Old-Fashioned Mother" Takes Issue With Advice Given "Only Child;" Says Conscience Prompts Her.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Your answer to "Only Child" in The Post of October 12 impels me to write you. I have heretofore read your replies to numerous letters with interest and sometimes admiration, but I can never again feel any confidence in your advice. It was the most cruel counsel I have ever read.

The young man's description of his mother makes her out a very unlovely character, but I feel the picture has been much overdrawn. Evidently he is not such a model son or his mother would not need to criticize his actions. Mothers are prone to think of their sons as still little boys even after they have long since reached the age of manhood, and in their anxiety for their son's happiness, are often overzealous and perhaps annoying—yet I can not believe a mother's love is selfish.

This mother may be unhappy, or perhaps not well. Your advice may be the cause of a tragedy in her life. How can you give such advice, knowing so little about the circumstances? Have you forgotten the commandment: "Honor thy father and thy mother?" This young man may cast his mother off; he may tell her he hates her, as you advise, and go his selfish way. But in the days to come he will look back over his life and regret, when it is too late, that he has been an unnatural son.

• • • •

I hope my words may reach this young man and that he will use patience and love with his mother. Some day he will reap his reward. My conscience dictates this letter. I can't do otherwise. Yours,

OLD-FASHIONED MOTHER.

Does the Shoe Fit?

DEAR OLD-FASHIONED MOTHER: It occurs to me that your sympathetic championship of "Only Child's" mother stems from the fact that you recognize in his picture of her a likeness to yourself; that in defending her you are defending yourself and your philosophy concerning a mother's right to tyrrannize over her child!

• • • •

That you do not bring a generous, adult or admirable attitude toward the parent-child relationship is revealed in your prophesy that "in the days to come he will look back over his life and regret, when it is too late, that he has been an unnatural son."

• • • •

There appeared on the woman's page of this newspaper, on October 15, an article written by a specialist in parent-child relationships, dealing with this very attitude of mind on the part of parents. The writer posed just such an igominious warning in the opening paragraph of the article, thus:

"Some day when I am gone and you look back over your behavior, you will be sorry for the way you acted. You will think, 'If I had been kinder to her when she was alive!' But it will be too late.' And then continued to say: "One can forgive old people for playing on the emotions this way . . . But it is not always old people who indulge in such sob stuff. Mothers are frequently guilty of it and in them it is inexcusable. There is cruelty in the parent who uses this means of training a child. He is deliberately hurting or trying to hurt the youngster in order to make him yield . . ."

If suggestions given "Only Child" for saving himself seem cruel, it is because desperate diseases require desperate remedies, and if the measures place him in the position of acting in an unnatural way, remember he is dealing with an unnatural parent, and that he has no choice but to meet fire with fire.

You assail me for having given advice while "knowing so little about the circumstances," yet take it upon yourself to pronounce his picture "much overdrawn." Are you in possession of any other testimony than that submitted in his letter published here?

I well realize it is a difficult matter to wisely advise in a matter where only one person's side of the story has been told. But I take it for granted that those who solicit my advice are as honest with me as they expect me to be with them. If they are not, then the fault is theirs and not mine if the advice is not suited to the actual problem.

M. E.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am a young girl who is fond of sports and of going places, and need the companionship of a girl of like interests. About a year ago my only sister got married and I lost her companionship, and besides most of my former girl associates have either married or moved away.

• • • •

Furthermore, I have recently broken off with a boy friend with whom I had been going steadily for the past five years. We were fond of each other and would have like to marry, but his salary was meager and other dependents put marriage out of the question. Under the circumstances, the future looked hopeless.

• • • •

I can offer a refined young girl around 23 to 25 years of age a lovely room in a pleasant home conveniently located in one of Washington's most attractive suburbs. I am employed, like sports and want a girl who is employed and fond of sports and going places. As you come in contact with many girls, I thought you might be able to assist me. I can be reached at Postoffice Box 4261, Takoma Park Station, Washington, D. C. Sincerely, R. W.

DEAR R. W.: The only assistance I can give you is to publish your letter here and trust that it will attract the interest of the sort of girl you are searching for. If the prospect is as fair as you paint it, it should be an ideal opportunity for some nice girl who is soul sick of lonely, hall-bedroom living. I suggest that any interested write you direct. M. H.

Shooting Costume Smartly Trimmed

Feminine touches are giving a new style interest to shooting costumes this season—these largely through accessories which are noted in smart new color combinations and materials. There are novel belts in peccary and box calf, with little pockets as shown by Hermes and Henry a la Pensee. There are little bags in vivid colored leathers and lacquered fabrics as well as in plastic materials which may be worn like fobs of cartridge belts. There are smart shooting costumes shown with doeskin gilets in bright colors or with vivid scarves. The new square shoes, Tyrolean gaiters and large plastic buttons imitating horn and engraved with hunting scenes are other style features of this season's smart shooting costume.

Merit Amendment

Returns to the questionnaire sent out by the National Civil Service Reform League to Congressional candidates and incumbents on the proposed merit amendment that is slated for introduction into the next Congress show a 20-to-1 ratio in support of the amendment.

This is the proposed amendment: "Appointments and promotions in the civil service of the United States shall be made according to merit and fitness to be ascertained, so far as practicable, by examinations, which, so far as practicable, shall be competitive."

In the league's letters which were sent out to approximately 900 Democrats and Republicans, Robert L. Johnson, the league president, asked whether or not they would approve such an amendment were it to be introduced.

Among the more enthusiastic responses received by the league were those of Senator Arthur Capper and Representatives John M. Houston, Lawrence E. Imhof, Henry C. Luckey and Peter Cavicchia.

Of the 824,259 persons listed on June 30 of this year, 498,725 were classified and 325,534 unclassified.

Justice Lodge 21 may be expelled from the A. F. G. E. and the Department of Justice may pride itself on its speed and efficiency, but there still is a notice on a fourth-floor bulletin board put up last May giving the advantages of union organization and urging employes to join up.

Convention Minutes

From all indications the minutes of the A. F. G. E.'s Detroit convention are likely to have an even greater best-seller appeal for local lodge officers and members than Robert's Rules of Order has been since James G. Yaden became the District Department president.

The expulsion of the five "new deal" lodges on "red" charges and the consequent interest in convention statements displayed by the Republican National Committee, Secretary of Agriculture Wallace and representatives of the Civil Liberties Union had already made the minutes much sought after. But now—after Friday's meeting of the District Department—many will be wondering how many jokers were slipped into the convention record.

At the District Department, Chairman Yaden, to the amazement of all but a select few, announced that the convention had decided that lodges with temporary certificates of affiliation were not lodges in the full sense of the word and therefore weren't entitled to representation in the District Department. None of the delegates present who were also at Detroit seemed to recall any such action and after much discussion it was decided to wait until the convention minutes were available before any such ruling would be applied.

The incident was rather illustrative of what went on at the convention and provided only further proof that few of the delegates to Detroit knew what was in the constitution they approved.

Committee chairmen announced at the meeting include John Dwyer, legislative; Charles H. Whitney, organization; Janet Gaines, union label; Mary Turner, education; Michael D. Schaefer, adjustment; Ira Y. Bain, ways and means; Charles Hoffman, constitution; Charles B. Buck, civic affairs; Helen McCarty, forum; Maj. Ralph I. Graves, publicity, and Fred Fraser, resolutions.

Other A. F. G. E. notes: The conciliation committee appointed to make peace between the two factions in the General Accounting Office Lodge consists of Henry Sasscer, Duke Strople and Carl Berger on the conservative side, and Theodore Frater, John Chedester and George Bowler from the progressive wing . . . Adjutant General's Office Lodge meets tomorrow night.

A number of persons have asked us what was the outcome of the poker game between Jessica Buck and Edward J. Cox, of the Railroad Retirement Board unit, apparently missing the news item that told the story. Still to keep our diary record straight, in defeating the attempt to dissolve the lodge, it was Jessica who raked in the chips. However, when she prevailed upon Cox to withdraw his resignation and continue as president, in effect, what Jessica was doing was to push back her winnings, saying:

"We were only playing for fun."

King to Move For Reforms In City's Rule

Senator Pledges Action in January on Basis of Board Report.

Fiscal Investigation Is Viewed as 'Wedge' for Drastic Changes.

The report of the President's commission appointed to establish a new basis for fiscal relations between the District and Federal governments will pave the way for a sweeping reorganization of the local government, it was learned last night.

Senator William H. King, chairman of the Senate District Committee, before departing for Utah last night, said reorganization of the District government will be one of the first problems on the agenda of the committee next January.

Senator King said he has been watching the work of the President's commission with keen interest and was impressed with the attention the commission members gave to the possibility of effecting economies in the local government through reorganization.

"The District has a good and efficient government now," Senator King said, "but that does not mean it cannot be made more efficient and more economical through consolidation and co-ordination of the various departments.

Data to Be Printed.

"Our committee has before it a very able report of the committee appointed to study possibilities of reorganizing the District government. When the committee meets I will move that the report be printed. The next step will be to call in the District Commissioners and discuss with them legislation which might be needed to bring about a reorganization."

The reorganization report was made by Peoples Counsel William A. Roberts, District Auditor Daniel Donovan and former Budget Director Lewis Douglas.

Senator King said the report was tabled temporarily because of the press of national emergency legislation. At the next session, Senator King said, the committee members will have more time to devote to consideration of the report.

It was pointed out that any legislation which might be needed to make effective recommendations of the Advisory Commission will be placed before the Senate District Committee at the same time it is studying the reorganization plan.

To Confer With Roberts.

At the conclusion of a public hearing on fiscal relations Saturday the advisory commission urged Roberts to confer with it after he completes his term as people's counsel at the end of this month.

The commission urged Roberts to draft a bill embodying his plan calling for the establishment of a permanent commission composed of Federal and District officials which would determine annually the amount of a Federal lump sum contribution toward local expenses.

Edward F. Colladay, chairman of the Citizens Joint Committee on Fiscal Relations, said that sometime this week he will comply with the request of the advisory commission and appoint a subcommittee of three to serve as a liaison between the commission and District taxpayers.

'God in Each of Us,' Woman Minister Says

With an understanding of the truth that "God is in each of us," men and women have "nothing to fear any time, anywhere," the Rev. Grace Lightfoot Patch declared before her congregation in the Grafton Hotel yesterday morning.

"The I Am (God) of us is immortal, eternal," the minister declared. "The body is changing every few months, but the I Am is unchanging eternal, ever perfect. This body is housing a reality. A new heaven and a new earth come forth for us. We are gods in the making and we have a right to the joy, peace, and liberty that come to the children of God."

A Fine Walk Along the Potomac Brings $500

Postlude

By Ray C. B. Brown.

National Symphony Orchestra begins its sixth season Sunday afternoon in Constitution Hall with a concert conducted by Hans Kindler, with Tito Schipa as soloist. Program: "Entrance of the Gods into Walhalla" from "Das Rheingold" (Wagner), Symphony No. 88 in G major (Haydn), "Una furtiva lagrima" from "L'Elisir d'Amore" (Donizetti), "Il mio tesoro" from "Don Giovanni" (Mozart), "Spring Pastoral" (Mary Howe), "Rhumba" (Harl McDonald), "Amarilli" (Caccini), "Pesca d'Amore" (Barthelmy), "Ninna Nanna a Liana" (R. Bellini), "Marechiare" (Tosti), "Les Preludes" (Liszt).

During the last few moments before the appearance of Hans Kindler on the podium, there passed perceptibly through the waiting audience that wave of anticipatory excitement which precedes a foreseen event of emotional elation. Summer concerts to the contrary, both the tradition and the significance of musical seasons persist, and an atmosphere of jubilation accompanies that first concert which is the forerunner of many more. The applausive welcome with which the auditors greeted the musicians and the ovational greeting to Dr. Kindler bespoke the pleasurable anticipation that was the dominant mood of the large assemblage.

One cannot help surmising that Dr. Kindler chose the excerpt from "Das Rheingold" as an allusion to the orchestra's confident entry upon its sixth year, its approach to that Walhalla of glory which is the reward for doughty deeds. Certainly in that stirring passage of processional triumph could be felt the presage of success, and no more fitting music could have been selected to head the program. The vigor and the spirit with which the orchestra played was in keeping with the omen; there was a fine freshness and a zealous dash in the performance.

Haydn's G major symphony, the first of the second set he wrote for the Parisian public, is that wholly satisfying kind of music which can be enjoyed for its own sake without the need of apostils, footnotes or commentaries to explain an esoteric meaning. In 1787 the symphonic form had not yet become the portmanteau into which composers pack a philosophical thesis; it was still a pattern of tones invented for the delectation of the ear, and the composer's intent did not go beyond the evocation of moods.

Through a long and busy life Haydn preserved to a remarkable degree the simplicity and the directness of an unspoiled nature. The clarity of his musical speech was untroubled by any misty rhetoric or affected cleverness of phrase. What he had to say was couched in language as plain as he could make it, yet such was the spontaneity of his invention that the sparkle of his genial humor, the serenity of his serious moments and the dignity of his reflective moods have lost no whit of their vitality.

Mrs. Howe's "Spring Pastoral" was given its first performance as an orchestral composition. Unless memory betrays me, the original version, a setting of Elinor Wylie's poem for a chorus of women's voices with piano accompaniment, had its premiere last season at a concert of the Friday Morning Music Club. In its new form it has gained in expressive subtlety more than it has lost in the disappearance of the text. It is now a wistful tone-poem, adroitly scored with a keen sense of instrumental color, which embodies the timelessness and the bittersweet piognancy of a drowsy reverie over a memory of long ago.

Harl McDonald's "Rhumba Symphony," which has hitherto remained beyond our horizon, must be a profitable work to hear, judging from the third movement. The sub-title of the symphony, "Reflections on an Era of Turmoil," gives one pause with its suggestion of music overladen with ideas, but there is nothing ponderous about the rhumba itself. The modicum of dissonance in the harmony may be taken to represent the unrest of our age, yet the sturdy vitality of the movement, the incisive quality of the themes, and the insistent rhythm have an invigorating effect.

This is no rhumba of the tropics, for languor has no part in it. The verve of the writing, the sinewy strength and the sheer energy are northern. The work is a translation of an exotic rhythm into the American vernacular.

Dr. Kindler's selection of "Les Preludes" as a number commemorative of the birth and death of Ferenc Liszt was appropriate, for the burden of this symphonic poem is Lamertine's metaphor that life is a series of preludes to death. Its familiar measures were set forth in stirring fashion.

Tito Schipa, whose voice has lost a little of its velvety texture in the open tones, is the master of bel canto that he has always been. The expertise of his singing is delightful to observe; the contour of the phrasing is graceful, the intonation precise and the tones are perfectly sustained on the breath. His readings of the arias were examples of stylistic surety. The audience waxed so enthusiastic over his artistry that the programmed group of four lyrics with piano accompaniment was followed by as many extra numbers.

Barlow Next Sunday

The National Symphony announced yesterday that for its concert next Sunday Howard Barlow, musical director of the Columbia Broadcasting Co., will be guest conductor. Barlow, who comes at the invitation of Hans Kindler, is well known to Washingtonians for his radio work. This will be his first personal appearance here.

First Concert Of Fall Given By Symphony

Kindler Again Conducts Orchestra; Wagner Works Chosen.

A typical Sunday concert crowd, dotted here and there with nuns, plutocrats, school teachers, priests, children and musicians, wished the National Symphony Orchestra Godspeed yesterday at Constitution Hall as it embarked on its new season.

While the future for the orchestra of 80 is fairly secure, the management nevertheless heartily welcomed a gift of $500 presented, in the spirit of general felicity of the occasion, by Tito Schipa, tenor soloist for the afternoon.

Schipa, Metropolitan Opera singer, explained backstage that he had had a very fine one-hour walk along the Potomac during the morning and that he also was happy to see Director Hans Kindler again, and he furthermore was anxious for the Capital to continue its symphony—therefore he had donated $500 out of his $1,750 pay check.

Although the audience did not know of his generosity, it applauded him warmly for each of his songs, necessitating exactly 12 bows and 4 extra encores, which Schipa did not mind in the least.

Richard Wagner, who is not exactly unknown to concert goers, received the honor of being the composer selected to start the year, with his "Entrance of the Gods into Walhalla," from "Das Rheingold," providing a suitable invocation.

As cymbols and tympani thundered, the audience edged forward happily and even the colonial figures painted on the wall behind the orchestra seemed to turn around and wait for the mighty crescendo to end.

Sylva Meyer, harpist, clad in a black velvet afternoon gown, as of yore, spent most of the afternoon sitting with her hands quietly folded in her lap, waiting for a moment which seldom came to join the 79 men.

The first cellist closed his eyes and rolled his instrument from side to side as he wafted off into rhapsodical melody, the piano wheels squeaked as usual when it was rolled onstage, some women fanned themselves with their programs, there were numerous coughers, 35 violins sighed as one, the ushers applauded louder than anyone else, and Manager C. C. Cappel hustled from door to door counting the house (which was four-fifth full) in all the familiar phenomena of concert time.

Kindler, solemn and Nordic, provided an interesting contrast with Italian Schipa, who marched on and off like a toy soldier, tossed his head and sent the crowd in ecstacies when he held sad, rich little notes for a full minute at a time.

Mrs. Mary Howe, of Richmond, composer of "Spring Pastoral," a dreamy mood melody on the program, refused to take a bow when Kindler waved his baton at her after her number. Heaviest ovation went to a violent rhumba composed by Harl McDonald, a teacher at the University of Pennsylvania, showing that the crowd enjoys modern rhythms. Cappel made note of the fact, and promised more at later concerts.

By 6 o'clock the man with slanting forehead and chewing gum was about asleep, women were fussing with their gloves, towncars were fidgeting in the street and Schipa had trilled his last lofty trill. First concert of the season was over and everyone went home pleased.

Former Clerk Blocks Store Robbery, Dies

Warehouse Watchman Beaten by Intruder in Northeast.

George Maynard, 35-year-old colored man, last night did his last job for Sam Kaufman's grocery store in the 2800 block of Georgia avenue northwest.

Maynard used to be a clerk and handyman at the grocery. He liked his work. Then, a year ago, he was forced to stop. Doctors told him he had heart trouble.

Last night Maynard was walking past the store. Something, perhaps a nostalgia for the happy bustling days he had known there, made him look inside.

He looked and saw two men forcing their way into the store from the rear. And he remembered again that he had worked there once, that the place was, in a way, his store.

His heart trouble was forgotten. Summoning a taxi cab, he went to the Tenth Precinct Station. Breathlessly, he told officers. Two of them, Detectives John Caton and R. V. Murray, jumped into the cab with him and returned to the store.

They arrested the two burglars and dispatched them to the station in a scout car. Then, with Maynard, they started to drive to the station in the cab.

Maynard, the excitement over and his job done, mumbled to the officers that he felt ill. Then he collapsed.

Caton and Murray rushed the man to Freedman's Hospital, but he was dead.

Flames Threaten Night Club Here

Fire which started after oil leaked out of a defective heating system yesterday threatened to destroy Heigh-Ho Club, at 1536 Connecticut avenue northwest, before firemen were able to bring it under control.

Two alarms were sounded for the blaze, which broke out about 10 a. m. Firemen from No. 9 Engine Company called additional apparatus.

The flames in the furnace room were under control shortly. Damage was said to be slight.

Twenty-three pieces of apparatus that responded to the two alarms tied up traffic on Connecticut avenue for about 30 minutes.

Thugs Attack, Rob 3 in City; Guard Felled

Bandit Pair Is Linked to Two Assaults; Women Rob Autoist.

A warehouse guard was knocked unconscious by a colored thief, three men were attacked and robbed by strong-arm bandits, and another victim beat off two assailants here in a series of week-end robberies.

Charles H. Stewart, 66, was recovering in his home, 2803 Thirteenth street northeast, yesterday after he was beaten unconscious by an intruder while he was making his rounds in the Barber & Ross warehouse, Fourth and Channing streets northeast.

Stewart, after he regained consciousness, notified police, who took him to Casualty Hospital. He was treated for cuts and bruises of the face and head.

Two colored men attacked Edward Wolf, of 1221 Wisconsin avenue northwest, while he was walking at Marion and P streets northwest Saturday night. Wolf told police one of the men grabbed him around the neck while the other attempted to get his billfold from his pocket.

The wallet contained his week's salary, Wolf said. He fought them off, he declared, and they fled through an alley.

A short time later two colored men, thought by police to be the same as those who attempted to rob Wolf, took a billfold containing $4 from James B. Payne, 56, of 1546 Third street northwest.

Payne said he was walking near Third and N streets northwest when the men jumped on him from behind. While one man held hmi, the other went through his pockets.

Thomas E. Poole, of 3212 Fourth street suotheast, was robbed of his pocketbook containing a driver's license and papers when he was entering his automobile parked in the rear of New Center Market. His two assailants, both colored, escaped on foot, Poole said.

George W. Johnson, 56, 834 Seventh street northeast, was beaten and robbed of $20 by a white man while he was walking in an alley in the rear of Fifth and H streets northwest.

Johnson said he was on his way home when the man attacked him. The thief threw him to the ground and took his billfold, Johnson reported.

By Henry Sutherland.

"PIGSKIN PARADE." Twentieth Century-Fox. What might have been a rib-shaking satire on the national football mania sputters out in a mess of musical numbers.

Beautiful original plot had Yale University inviting University of Texas to New Haven for an Armistice Day game. By mistake Yale's publicity man sent the bid to unheard of "Texas State University—enrollment 700."

Texas State has a coach (Jack Haley) lifted from a Flushing, Long Island, high school, a basketball team and football ambitions. Patsy Kelly, the coach's wife and brains, puts the basketball team to work on a razzle-dazzle, short-lateral game with amazing results. They clean up the Southwest before heading East.

Patsy, however, gets tanked on college gin and breaks the star passer's leg trying to teach him how to block. In remorse she goes into the sticks and digs up Stuart Erwin, a hill billy farmer whose specialty is tossing watermelons a quarter of a mile to his sister, who catches them in a basket.

Led by Passer Erwin the boys beat Yale in a blizzard, while the yacht club boys sing: "We Brought the Sunshine of Texas to You."

The picture contains 11 musical numbers, and only five might, by a stretch of imagination, seem to have something to do with the plot. These are "Texas Tornado," "Hold That Bulldog," "T. S. U. Alma Mater," "Down With Everything," and the "Sunshine Song."

Takeoff seems obviously inspired by Southern Methodist University that tripped out to the Rose Bowl with its redhot band last winter. Texas will probably call out the Rangers, for not a soul in the cast talks "Texas," except Erwin.

"THE CHARGE OF THE LIGHT BRIGADE." (Warner Brothers). One of the better westerns, with cowboys dressed as British soldiers of the middle nineteenth century and Indians as India frontier tribesmen.

Olivia De Havilland is pretty as a heart flush in the feminine lead, and Patric Knowles, a new, fresh-looking Englishman, will please the ladies in the No. 2 hero spot. C. Henry Gordon menaces 'em to death as official badman.

Movie motive for the historically unexplained charge is rigged by Gordon ("Surat Khan"). "Burning because the British government has taken away his subsidy he massacres wives and children of the "Twenty-seventh Lancers," in a border foray.

"WE WHO ARE ABOUT TO DIE." (RKO-Radio). Radio makes excellent entertainment of the death-house story of David Lamson, former Stanford University official tried four times for murder and once condemned in the death of his wife.

Lamson's plotless series of sketches are colorful as background for a tightly written screen play by John Twist, and the result is a powerful preachment against circumstantial evidence.

Top acting honors go to Preston Foster as a police officer who ultimately proves John Beall innocent of a murder committed during a pay roll robbery and a subsequent hit-and-run killing. Ann Dvorak is appealing as the girl who stuck by the victim.

Picture scores chiefly in good taste. Most death-row films rehearse the harrowing details of preliminary executions until the audience is "about to die," but Director Christy Cabanne has stirred in no more horror than enough to provide convincing atmosphere

"SPEED AND SPARKLE." Independent Burlesque Association production in two acts and 27 scenes, featuring Sunya Slane, with Benny Moore, Bates and Hunt, Charles Raymond, Harry White, Tom Fairclough, Vilma Josey, Martha Patti, Mlle. Zuleka and the Dancing Bryanettes. Staged by James J. Lake. Reviewed Sunday matinee by W. A. Whitney.

"Speed and Sparkle" they called this latest exhibit of the Independent Burlesque Association's contributions to the lively arts, and such it truly is, the whole show progressing with celerity and brilliance.

Class, with a capital C, is generously present, with its most brilliant exhibit in the stately charm of Vilma (or Vilmira) Josey, whose brunette dignity and impressive carriage place her almost in a niche exclusively her own among burlesque's most talented revelatory artistes.

There is, too, Sunya Slane, whose famed smile is always welcome. Her work is all that can be desired.

Comics Are Standouts.

For the skits, there is that pair of comics who have few if any equals in the business of making the most out of comedy. Clyde Bates and Jack Hunt, separately and together, contribute more of their stuff, which is much better seen and heard than read about.

Bennie "Wop" Moore has his innings, too, and he has never appeared to better advantage than he does this week. The comics are ably abetted by Tom Fairclough and Charles Raymond.

Harry White offers several fast tap dances, and Mlle. Zuleka goes through a solo snake dance (among others) which is unusual and particularly well done. Martha Patti sings songs sweetly—even if loudly—with the Dancing Bryanettes adding further to the enjoyment of Col. Lake's revue.

When Lillian Porter, blue-eyed, black-haired Los Angeles dancer, needed funds to finish high school, she answered a want ad for film dancers in a Los Angeles newspaper. As a result, she was engaged as a line-girl in "Folies Bergere," "Broadway Melody" and "Anything Goes" before Darryl F. Zanuck signed her for "Sing, Baby Sing." On the strength of her work in that picture, the doll-like Miss Porter has just been put under long-term contract by Twentieth Century-Fox. She is shown stepping it off in the likeness appearing just north of here.

About the Showshops

THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA'S eleventh One-Act Play Tournament was written into the records with the judging of the finals in the auditorium of Roosevelt High School on Saturday night. As was the case last February in judging the finals of the tenth tournament, the choice of the winner was unanimous on the first ballot.

BELL.

This, however, does not mean that other entries did not enlist the lively support of several of those asked to sit in judgment.

"Fixins," Paul Green's playlet of the cotton country, presented by the Langley Lambs, and "Gloria Mundi," Patricia Brown's bizarre study of life and events in the waiting room of an insane asylum both had their advocates.

But a great many factors enter into the final appraisals of these tournament productions—play content, acting, direction, setting, lighting, the adequate projection of the lines across the footlights and all of the other elements that are involved in catching an audience's fancy with a footlight work.

First award Saturday night was made to the play that possessed the greatest degree of merit from the standpoint of a thorough consideration of all these factors.

"Fixins," largely by reason of the fact, no doubt, that four of the five judges sat in the fourth, fifth and sixth rows, right, was only occasionally audible to them and, therefore, only partially intelligible. All of the dialogue between the male characters, when one was facing offstage at the cookstove and the other was talking cross-stage to him, was lost to those judging the play's merits from the side of the house to the players' backs. One cannot vote a winner a play he has not heard. And, after all, it is the actor's task to play to every seat in the house, instead of to only a part of them.

While well done, "Gloria Mundi" was defeated by its own ambiguity. A play that is so obscure in purpose and so vague in motivation as to leave no definite impression upon an audience save one of bewilderment, seemed to the judges to fall something short of the ideal in short play writing.

These "post mortems," so to speak, are set down in no sense of apology or extenuation, but to convey to the participants in the finals of the tournament and the public some concrete notion of the judges' approach to a task that often presents a pretty problem in differentiation among plays that more times than not are so nearly on a parity that the minutest considerations of judicial appraisal may tip the balance of critical judgment one way or the other.

A great deal seems to depend upon the treatment which the given theme is accorded on the screen in the matter of eluding the vagaries of the various State motion picture censor boards scattered about the country. A specific example of what I mean has just come under the observation of the National Capital. "Spring Shower," at the Belasco, was banned in New York State and Pennsylvania, according to the censors' own statements, in part because it was felt that society would be affronted by the phase of the story that caused Marie, the hapless heroine, to find nothing but abuse and cruelty at the hands of respectable people and pity, kindness and shelter only from the inmates of a house of ill-fame. In "Valiant Is the Word for Carrie," little Paul Darnley is knocked around by his father in most brutal fashion and is able to find kindliness, sympathy and understanding only at the taboo establishment of the outlawed Magdalene living behind her high-board stockade out at the edge of town. It would be interesting to know wherein lies the difference in sociological implication between "Spring Shower" and "Valiant Is the Word for Carrie." My argument is not against "Valiant," but for "Spring Shower" and against the contradictory processes on which censor boards seem to thrive.

Speaking of the Belasco, "Spring Shower" will be succeeded on Tuesday by a two-a-day, road-show engagement of the French screen version of Victor Hugo's immortal "Les Miserables," with Harry Baur in the stellar role.

"Les Miserables" is a picture of full three-hour duration and does not lend itself to the continuous "all-day grind showings" of the ordinary screen feature. The first showing of the picture will be Tuesday night at 8:30, with all seats reserved. Thereafter, screenings will be at 2:30 and 8:30 p. m. daily.

This version of the heroic story, played in in the American production by Charles Laughton and Fredric March, was filmed in the actual locales of which Hugo wrote. With Baur in the role of Jean Valjean, the role of Javert, his relentless Nemesis, will be in the competent hands of Charles Vanel. Raymond Bernard, who collaborated with Andre Lang in fashioning the screen play, also directed the picture.

While "Les Miserables" is being presented as a two-a-day attraction, it is noteworthy that the regular scale of prices is not being increased, save for a modest advance of 10 cents in the cost of loge seats. The box office will be open the regular hours daily for the convenience of those who may wish to purchase tickets in advance.

Reverting briefly to the progress of events in Washington's resident theater, it is announced by the management that owing to a demand for seats beyond the capacity of the theater, the Washington Civic Theater will repeat its sterling performance of George Bernard Shaw's "Caesar and Cleopatra" on Friday and Saturday nights of this week in the Wardman Park Theater. The final performances of last week's four-day engagement were complete sellouts. There will be no matinee performance this Saturday.

With its first production thus still going strong, the Civic Theater, nevertheless, is proceeding at once with preparations for its next, the Chodorov-Walpole hit, "Kind Lady." Tryouts for places in the cast will be held at the Theater Workshop from 5:30 to 6:30 p. m., and from 7:30 p. m. on into the night, today and tomorrow. There are seven roles for women and six for men in this play.

In case you did not recognize him, or wondered where you might have seen him before, the player in the role of Nick, the fisherman, in "Valiant Is the Word for Carrie," is Don Alfonso Zelaya, the piano-playing comedian of vaudeville, who appeared as headliner at the Earle only a week or two ago. Didja ever?

Beer-and-Skittles Note.

Remember when Don Alfonso used to play that rickety old piano in the back room of Stonestreet's, down on the Avenue near Twelfth. But no, you probably wouldn't.

Jimmie Fidler In Hollywood

Hollywood, Oct. 25.

Most of the headline romances of Hollywood history have died in their own smouldering ashes. Burned out perhaps by their own intensity, just as white-hot metal reduces itself to nothingness. A few of those great loves which have commanded newspaper banner lines and kept columnists of the past two decades in cold sweat are: Greta Garbo and John Gilbert, Janet Gaynor and Charles Farrell, Lupe Velez and Garry Cooper, Pola Negri and Rudolph Valentino, Myrna Loy and Barry Norton, Mary Brian and Buddy Rogers, Olive Borden and George O'Brien.

JANET GAYNOR.

I might list more, but parades of names are tiring. It is not uncommon for fiery romances to peter out in final flares, but not all of the colony's unhappily ending great loves were highly emotional.

Miss Gaynor and Farrell carried on a Prince Charming love affair that might have been lifted from a book of fairy tales. Miss Borden and O'Brien and Miss Brian and Rogers waged similarly sweet romances. The Gaynor-Farrell courtship, which ended in spiteful fret, commanded more newspaper and magazine space than any like story of movie history. A dozen scrapbooks, filled with clippings, is still a cherished possession of one of the two stars. I leave you to guess which one.

Movie bulls: Universal's rejection of Jane Withers at $5 a day, just two days before she signed a contract with Twentieth Century-Fox studio where she now earns $1,500 a week. (1934).

Mary Pickford's decision to continue her role of ingenue star. Her last picture flopped miserably, and instead of retiring at top fame, she quit a has-been. (1933).

Decision of studio heads to bar stars from radio programs. The stars merely laughed, and the movie moguls were left looking like silly asses. (1936).

At Tom Brown's house the other night a bunch of us were munching our host's favorite dish, Irish stew. It was a little snack brewed by Tom's own unlily-white hands, and with due justice to his prowess, it was tasty. Midway of the meal, Ralph Bellamy (who prides himself on his culinary achievements) asked Brown for his recipe. "Aw, I have no recipe," Tom admitted. "Stuff just accumulates around the kitchen and I toss it in the pot."

By the way, I have an idea. The male stars are daffy on the subject of cooking. Offhand, I can name three dozen who openly boast of their ability to dish up fancy fodder. One of these days I shall open a cooking school for "men only," and I will mop up. Or did you know that you can eat a Fidler biscuit and still float?

Juvenile Play

"SLEEPING BEAUTY." The Children's Theater of New York presents the dramatization in three acts and four scenes by Clare Tree Major of the fairy story of the same name, directed by Mrs. Major, with costumes by Marion DePew and settings by Irving Morrow. At the National Theater. Reviewed Saturday morning by W. A. Whitney.

The fifth Washington season of the Children's Theater of New York was auspiciously opened on Saturday morning when some 1,800 children of all ages jammed into the National Theater to witness Clare Tree Major's dramatization of the fairy tale, "Sleeping Beauty."

Produced with the smoothness which has characterized the Theater's plays in the past, "Sleeping Beauty" continued the good work, giving the fanciful yarn a vigorous reading which lent authenticity to the well-known story of fairies' blessings and a witch's curse.

Unfortunately, however, little real action marks the development of the story and as a result the youthful audience was appreciably restless. For those of more mature years, on the other hand, in "Sleeping Beauty" there was the delightful delineation by Jewel Morse, whose endowments might well have been conferred by the fairies of beauty, happiness and wisdom so well did she limn the title role.

Miss Parr's Which Is Par.

Kate Parr, whose make-up and performance were of the finest, made Baba Yaga, the witch, indeed a person to be feared. Ray Parker was the dashing tsarevitch smitten at first sight by lovely Princess Jewel.

Others in the capable company—all of whom turned in truthful interpretations — included Arthur Goldner and Edwin Hugh, as pages; Edward Charles, as a guard; Frank Rothe and Velma Roynton, as the parents; Sara Letout, Lucille Moss and Margaret Joyce, as the fairies; Glenn Arnold, as the prince's tutor, and Elizabeth Hugh, as the princess' lady in waiting.

Incidental violin music was furnished by Mr. Arnold, and the Misses Morse, Joyce and Hugh presented several dances. Mrs. Major's direction was fine, and the costuming by Marion DePew and settings by Irving Morrow commendable.

Nazi Envoy Seeks Amity in London

Berlin, Nov. 25 (AP).—Joachim von Ribbentrop, German Ambassador to the Court of St. James, left for London tonight with the special mission of broadening and deepening Anglo-German friendship.

Deep significance was attached to his mission, folowing immediately after the visit by Count Galeazzo Ciano, Italian Foreign Minister. Observers beleved Hitler—desirous as he may be of taking full advantage of Italo-German co-operation — is anxious to avoid anything likely to alienate Britain.

Outward Bound to Find a Job

Where did he commit his first error? RIGHT HERE, where things ARE "really moving." A little less footwork and more brainwork would have told him that something was wrong with his method of finding a job. Further he should have realized that in every town or city people are leaving for other cities impelled by the same motive as his!

Again, "making the rounds" is a restricted process. You can see so many people in a day and no more. Your chances of their being interested are slim. But when THEY COME TO YOU . . . that's another story! The REAL way to cover the territory . . . and we mean INTERESTED people . . . is to ADVERTISE. Tell your qualifications to the world! Eagles Attack Official After Giants Win Close Game, 21 to 17

Phils Resent His Decision On a Pass

By the Associated Press.

New York, Oct. 25.—The New York Giants defeated the Philadelphia Eagles, 21 to 17, today in a National League football game and immediately after the final whistle Field Judge George Vergara was attacked by two Philadelphia players for ruling interference on a Giant pass which led to the winning touchdown.

Trailing, 14-17, and with less than three minutes left, Ed Danowski passed to Winnie Anderson. The ball was yards ahead of the intended receiver, but Vergara charged Swede Hanson with interference on the 15-yard line. The Eagles protested in vain. Two plays later Danowski passed to Kink Richards, who was ruled down on the 3, and on the next thrust Richards crossed the line.

Charge Referee.

After the game several thousand of the 15,000 spectators swarmed on the field and the beaten Eagles surrounded Vergara. George Mulligan and Joe Pivaronik, Eagles reserve end and guard, who did not play, charged into Vergara, but no harm was done as Referee Tom Thorpe intervened quickly. Vergara came out of the melee with his bow tie askew and a torn shirt.

As in many of the other games, the Giants played lethargically in the first half and were behind, 10 to 7, going into the third period. With Dave Smukler doing the heavy work, ripping off huge hunks of yards at a time, the Eagles paraded 85 yards to a touchdown in the first period. Smukler almost alone carried the ball 70 yards to the Giants' 15 and then he passed to Leonard in the end zone.

Leemans Gains 45 Yards.

Tuffy Leemans, New York's sensational rookie halfback, gained 45 yards through the line to the Eagles' 15 in the second period and then passed to Tod Goodwin for a touchdown. Four minutes before the end of the first half Smukler booted a 28-yard field goal from placement to put the Eagles in the lead again.

The Eagles increased their advantage just before the half time whistle when Stumpy Thomason intercepted a pass on the Eagle 45 and raced to New York's 19. Smukler passed to Pilconis in the end zone for the score.

Midway through the final quarter the Giants pulled up to 14-17 as Leemans fumbled on the Eagles' 3 and alert Walt Singer, Giant end, picked up the ball and crossed the pay stripe.

Smith, Little Win In Richmond Golf

Richmond, Va., Oct. 25 (AP).—Horton Smith and Lawson Little defeated Jimmy Thompson and Bobby Cruickshank, 2 and 1, in a best ball exhibition match over the James River course this afternoon.

Reaching the turn all square, Smith went on a sub-par spree on the second nine to send him and Little into the lead.

Miss Saenger Surprise Winner of Texas Golf

Fort Worth, Tex., Oct. 25 (U.P.).—Miss Edna Saenger, of Shreveport, La., won the women's golf championship of Texas today by defeating Mrs. Frank Goldthwaite, of Fort Worth, defending champion, 1 up on the thirty-ninth hole.

Mrs. Goldthwaite, former member of the U. S. Curtis Cup Team, had the advantage of playing on her home course at the River Crest Country Club, and shot an 83, compared with Miss Saenger's 85, on the first round over the par 77 route. The two players finished all square, however, for the round.

Miss Simmons Breaks Own Pin Mark

By the Associated Press.

Baltimore, Oct. 25.—Ida Simmons, of Norfolk, Va., broke her own world duckpin record today in defeating Alice Lucas, of Baltimore, 1,355 to 1,147 for the ten games. Her previous record score was 1,274.

Miss Simmons almost shattered her five-game record of 694 by getting 693 pins in the first set. Her high game for this set was 151, and her high for the second set was 162.

Miss Simmons won the Oriole Sweepstakes in Baltimore Saturday with a ten-game score of 1,249. The Norfolk star tacked together two five-game sets of 640 and 611 to triumph over a field of 34 of the South's leading feminine stars at the Twentieth Century Alleys.

Naomi Zimmerman finished second with 1,219. The Baltimore roller went into the final game leading Miss Simmons by three pins. Then the country's foremost expert bore down to win going away with a final game of 143 to 110.

Lorraine Gulli, Washington's outstanding roller was third with 1,155. Helen Randlett, of Richmond, was fourth with 1,149 and fifth money went to Blanche Wootton, of Washington, with 1,144.

Pirates Inundated By Packers, 42-10

Milwauke, Wis., Oct. 25 (U.P.).—The Green Bay Packers swamped the Pittsburgh Pirates, 42 to 10, before 10,000 persons here today.

The Pirates scored early on Niccolai's field goal from the 24-yard line, but a pass, Monnent to Laws, scored for the Packers from the Pittsburgh 12-yard line, and thereafter the Packers dominated, making three touchdowns in the second period.

With Shirley Povich.

Pitt, 26; Notre Dame, 0—Anyway, this was the kind of a score the late Knute Rockne was always predicting, if that's any consolation to the South Benders. No bricks, please—ah'm only kidding—but strange that Notre Dame's worst licking in 22 seasons should come in a year when a few Irishers are playing with the Irish.

POVICH.

Tennessee, 15; Duke, 13—Dimly I recall having read—or maybe I wrote it—that Duke was destined to go to the Rose Bowl. I now have it official: Duke will not go to the Rose Bowl. Duke met with a slight accident down there in Knoxville Saturday. Suffered a deflation of the ego, I understand.

Minnesota, 33; Purdue, 0—No, that's no printer's error. It really happened out there at Minneapolis. Purdue was supposed to be an inspired team Saturday, but apparently they forgot to show the Gophers the clippings. Minnesota wasn't inspired. It just flung the Nation's greatest set of backs at Purdue and trusted to luck.

Princeton, 7; Navy, 0—The Tigers hit the Middies below the water line with that "hidden-ball" play they pulled out of the mothballs. Last week it was an accidental kick that beat Navy and on Saturday it was the age-old sneak play. Next week, East Lynn will probably be the play that will beat the Middies.

Georgetown, 7; N. Y. U., 7—From all reports, which showed the Violets outplaying the Hoyas, Georgetown should accept this one with no questions asked. Hoyas are still unbeaten, but badly scared. The Violets apparently hadn't heard about Tom Keating, or didn't care.

George Washington, 13; Wake Forest, 12—Monday morning, and I'm still tingling from this one. But any team that runs off eight plays in the last minute and 40 seconds deserves to win, no matter how. Any team that can run off 30 plays in the course of a 60-minute game is working fast. G. W. was playing both Wake Forest and the stopwatch in that last minute.

Mississippi, 14; Catholic U., 0—Ole Miss didn't miss Saturday. The Hapes boys who were shackled by mud against G. W. were footloose against C. U. Apparently it's true what they've been saying about the Cardinals—that Bergman's team is not what it's cracked up to be—just cracked up.

Maryland, 20; Syracuse, 0—Sounds like Bill Guckeyson was around the premises, and it's a fact. Big Bill was overdue and his performance at Syracuse was no surprise. By the time the Georgetown game rolls around, that Maryland team may be the favorite over the Hoyas.

Dartmouth, 26; Harvard, 7—Fast color, that Crimson. Not much run in 'em. Dick Harlow was supposed to place a winning Harvard team on the field this year, but he musta got his dates mixed. It's 1936, Bill, in case you hadn't heard.

Holy Cross, 7; Carnegie, 0—The Crusaders pulled the old Statue of Liberty play on unsuspecting Carnegie and got away with it. It only goes to show. Twenty-four thousand fans paid to see the Statue of Liberty gain 36 yards.

Fordham, 7; St. Mary's, 6—The Galloping Gaels rode roughshod until they got into scoring territory. They tried to steal the game with a pair of field goals, but you can't kick an extra point after a field goal. The old touchdown is still a pretty good asset.

Michigan, 13; Columbia, 0—The wonder is that 5,000 persons paid to see this battle of Fallen Idols. They were playing for the championship of Columbia and Michigan, respectively. But the Wolverines silenced the wolves who were howling for Coach Harry Kipke's job.

Northwestern, 13; Illinois, 2—The Wildcats are still unbeaten, untied and unwanted as opposition. They are working their way up to the Minnesota game which will decide the Big Ten title. Out in Chicago right now, the ticket scalpers are reaping a harvest on that battle.

Ohio State, 7; Indiana, 0—The Buckeyes had to play, literally, over their heads, to win this one. It was an Ohio State pass that decided the game in the second quarter. But something was screwy. Ohio State threw 41 passes and made only one seven.

Chicago Bears Defeat Lions By 12 to 10

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Oct. 25.—The powerful Chicago Bears, largely through the accurate toe of Fullback Jack Manders, defeated Detroit 12 to 10 in the rain at Wrigley Field today practically to snuff out the Lions' hopes of retaining the National Football League title.

More than 27,000 saw the battle, in which all scoring was packed into the first half. Seconds before the half-time gun sounded, Manders booted his second field goal to give the Bears their sixth straight league victory in as many starts. It was Detroit's second straight defeat.

The Bears drew first blood. A short Detroit punt gave Chicago possession in Detroit territory in the first, Manders booting a field goal from the 34. The Lions came back with a rush, a long march being climaxed by Earl (Dutch) Clark's second-period drop-kick from the 28, tying the score.

A 14-yard pass to Luke Johnsos gave the Bears a touchdown, but Mander's try for point was blocked, making the score 9 to 3. Clark broke away for a 38-yard run to give the Lions a scoring chance, and Petersen went over for a touchdown, Clark drop-kicking the extra point. An aerial attack brought the Bears into Detroit territory late in the second, and Mander's winning field goal followed.

Cleveland, Ohio, Oct. 25 (U.P.).—Cleveland's Rams smashed the second place New York Yankees, 27 to 0, here today in an American League professional football game before 12,000 spectators.

After a scoreless first quarter, the Rams got into action and pushed over two touchdowns in the second period via the airlines. Harry Mattos, All-America halfback from St. Mary's, flicked a 15-yard pass to Padlow who galloped 35 more to tally.

Portsmouth Beats Local Pros, 7-0

The Portsmouth Pros outjuggled the Washington Pros on a more or less freak touchdown play yesterday in Griffith Stadium and finally left for home with a 7-0 victory. It was the winners' second Dixie Pro League victory in four starts and Washington's second defeat as against two victories.

While a crowd of some 1,000 spectators gulped and gasped half a dozen times, the Virginians proceeded to win the ball game in the second quarter on a 20-yard pass which finally came to rest in the hands of Al Casey, Portsmouth back, in the end zone after Washington and Portsmouth men had frantically tried to grab the pigskin only to have it slip away.

Bill Daughtrey, Portsmouth passer, uncorked the toss midway in the period, but Dick Nelson, right halfback for the locals, appeared on the scene and attempted to knock it down in the end zone. He knocked it all right, but not down, and the leather flopped into the possession of Hank Barnett, Portsmouth right end, who was so surprised at this turn of events that he juggled the ball like a hot potato.

D. C. Team Doesn't Threaten.

Nelson, meanwhile, was trying to get in on the proceedings only to find the ball finally bounce from the jittery Portsmouth wingman to Mr. Casey, who momentarily bobbled the elusive leather after scooping it up just before it touched the ground. He managed to hang on to it, however, and it was a touchdown. "Nellie" Brown place-kicked the extra point.

The Washington outfit never seriously threatened to score. Their most dangerous advance was a daring march to the Portsmouth 35-yard line in the second period.

Despite the timid offensive of the locals, Portsmouth decided to put the game on ice in the final moments of play after a 25-yard pass from Quarterback Tom Johnson to Casey put the leather on the Washington 11-yard line. Three plays brought 5 yards and Brown fell back to try his field goal, but Al Farrell and Bill Andorka crashed through to help cause Daughtrey to fumble the pass from cetner.

Manero, Revolta Lose in Argentine

By the Associated Press.

Buenos Aires, Oct. 25.—John Cruickshank, Scotch-born professional and a former bank clerk, won the Argentine open golf championship over his "home" course, the Olivos Country Club, today.

Cruickshank compiled a 72-hole total of 290 to beat out the United States Pros, Tony Manero, of Greensboro, N. C., and Johnny Revolta, of Milwaukee, as well as the pick of the Argentine pros.

A fine round of 69 this morning, breaking par by four strokes, gave Cruickshank the lead and he held it on the final 18 as the players were forced to battle a high wind which caused mediocre scores.

Georgetown's Cagers Play N. Y. U. Dec. 30

New York, Oct. 25 (AP).—New York University announced today a 17-game basketball schedule for the coming season, to include intersectional contests with Ohio State, North Carolina and Notre Dame.

The schedule is two games under the slate the Violets played last year, and three less than the 1934 card. Eight of the games will be played at Madison Square Garden, and only one, with Rutgers, will be played away from New York. Georgetown is to be met on December 30.

Loyal Notre Dame Students All Out To Welcome Team

South Bend, Ind., Oct. 25 (AP).—More than 2,000 Notre Dame students were at the railroad station this morning to greet the Irish football squad as it returned from Pittsburgh after taking a 26-to-0 defeat yesterday—the worst for a Notre Dame team since 1925 when the Army won, 27 to 0.

Answering demands for a speech, Coach Elmer Layden, despite great emotion, said, "nothing has ever touched me as deeply as this turnout. I must have forgotten myself when I ran to the field yesterday, but I just wanted to see that no injustice was done to one of our boys."

He was referring to an incident late in the game when players believed Chuck O'Reilly, substitute quarterback, was being ordered off the field for unnecessary roughness. When Umpire A. H. Slack ordered O'Reilly to one side, Layden ran on the field and in demonstrating how he believed O'Reilly had used his hands legitimately pushed the umpire. He was booed as he left the field.

Kercheval Star As Dodgers Triumph

By the Associated Press.

New York, Oct. 25.—The Brooklyn Dodgers turned back the Chicago Cardinals, 9 to 0, today to hand the Westerners their sixth consecutive defeat in the National Professional Football League race.

Seventeen thousand fans at Ebbetts Field—the largest crowd of the Brooklyn season—saw the Dodgers, displaying their full strength for the first time this year, roll up a lead in the first half, protect it in the second and outplay the Cardinals in every department throughout.

Ralph Kercheval, former University of Kentucky star, was the big noise in the Brooklyn triumph. He climaxed a 65-yard Dodger march with a 10-yard field goal in the first quarter and followed this achievement in the second by intercepting a Chicago pass and galloping 55 yards for the only touchdown.

The Cardinals muffed their only real scoring chance when they drove 45 yeards to the Dodger 19-yard stripe in the fourth, only to lose the ball on downs when their passing attack failed to click. Phil Sarboe and "Mule" Dowell led the parade from the Chicago 35.

Pecora Takes Lead In Eastern Scoring

By the Associated Press.

New York, Oct. 25.—For the third straight week-end, the East had a new leading individual football scorer today, with Bill Pecora, fullback of the undefeated New York Aggies, taking over to end the short-lived reign of Fred King, of Hobart.

Just as King succeeded Ted Mujwit, of Western Maryland, last week after a one-week run, Pecora posted a total of 45 points, with seven touchdowns and three extra points, to go in front. He climbed to the top with three touchdowns and an extra point in yesterday's victory over Hartwick.

King sank to fourth place behind a pair of ball-carriers from the unbeaten, untied Cortland (N. Y.) Teachers, Fullback Harry Brosius and Halfback Harold Stone, who deadlocked for second with 42 points each.

Grid Casualty List Takes Big Leap

By Alan Gould.

Associated Press Sports Editor.

New York, Oct. 25.—College football's casualty list, sparing no particular section or reputation, shaped up today as the most shocking so far this season along the front lines of combat.

Ten additional teams in the so-called "major league" ranks were either beaten or tied for the first time during a week-end marked by wholesale form reversals, contrasting sharply with the conquering rush of Minnesota's unconquerables and the explosive return to power of the Pittsburgh Panthers.

Chief among the victims as the campaign reached the half way stage were (1) Duquesne, toppled by West Virginia Wesleyan Friday night, less than a week after whipping mighty Pittsburgh and (2) Duke, sand-bagged by Tennessee after being put forward as the South's No. 1 Rose Bowl candidate and rated second only to Minnesota last week in a nation-wide Associated Press poll of sports experts.

Yesterday's most startling upset saw Wallace Wade's powerful Blue Devils frustrated repeatedly near the Tennessee goal line and finally beaten, 15 to 13, by the exploits of a youth named "Red" Harp, who gathered in one of Ace Parker's long punts late in the final period and ran 70 yards for the winning score.

Vols Earn Prize of Week.

Tennessee's triumph, in some of its chief features, resembled Pennsylvania's surprising conquest over Princeton's powerhouse the week before. It earned the "prize of the week" for the scrappy Vols who had tallied only six points in three previous major games and were not rated in the same class with Duke.

It also was a feather in the coaching cap of Maj. Bob Neyland, back as head man at Tennessee this season after a year's absence.

Meantime the crushing power in two of the Nation's most formidable scoring machines cut down two previous members of the Midwestern vanguard, Purdue and Notre Dame.

Any slight hesitation in ranking Minnesota as the country's No. 1 team again has been completely removed for the time being as a consequence of the 33-0 rout of Purdue by the Galloping Gophers. Anything short of a unanimous vote in this week's national poll will come under the heading of heresy.

Notre Dame Unlucky.

For the first time Bernie Bierman's powerhouse pulled all the switches, with a result that can be anything but reassuring this week to Northwestern's hopes of doing something about halting the Minnesotans. Purdue put up heroic resistance in holding the Gophers to 6 points for the first half, but folded under the steadily increasing pressure. In making it 21 in a row, the Gophers indicated they are still two or three deep in every vital position, with power to burn and no worries about the law of averages.

Notre Dame had the misfortune to catch Pittsburgh on the rebound. The Irish took a 26-to-0 drubbing, as a consequence, while more than 70,000 spectators wondered how it had been possible for such a Panther powerhouse to lose to Duquesne the week before on the

Terps Suffer $600 Loss at Syracuse

By John R. Vosburgh.

Despite its 20-0 victory over Syracuse, Saturday, the University of Maryland was a heavy loser. The Terps lost eight complete football outfits valued at more than $600.

The big loss occurred shortly after the big victory. According to the fragmentary information available, somewhat vague at best, the suits were cooly stolen on a well-planned maneuver which consisted of backing an automobile to the back end of the truck containing the uniforms and transferring the property from one vehicle to the other.

Among the players deprived of raiment were Bill Guckeyson, Maryland's all-American candidate, and Johnny Gormley, who scored two of the three touchdowns between them against Syracuse.

Packed in canvas bags, each outfit consisted of gabardine football pants, socks, stockings, supporters, helmet frame, two pairs of football shoes and the colorful, gold-colored jerseys which Maryland is making famous this year, including Guckeyson's No. 57.

Sole consolation of the managerial staff after the tragedy was the fact that the shoulder pads of the eight players were not taken, being separately packed. The theft was made in full view of an eyewitness, a lady sitting in a car parked nearby the gymnasium. Upon inquiry as to where the uniforms had vanished, she said she saw some boys of high school age quickly transfer the suits from truck to automobile.

Manager Harvey Cooke, conscientious custodian of the Terps' football property, was more or less broken up by the whole business. He refused to be placated by either players or school officials, who were quick to explain that the theft occurred through no neglect on the part of Maryland.

Syracuse University, police and the transfer company carrying the uniforms were all recipients of numerous complaints. Shortly before departure from Syracuse, the Old Liners were notified that the police believed they were hot on the trail of the culprits.

Geary (Swede) Eppley, director of athletics, who once received two black eyes and a broken nose at Syracuse back in 1920 when he played end for Maryland, spent a vigorous three hours trying to find the outfits without success.

The university is not sure whether or not the transfer company will make good the financial loss. The outfits are valued at about $75 apiece.

The Travelers Aid Society was reported to have gotten them safely back to College Park last night.

Lean, hard-bitten Capt. Armando Villareal, leader of the Mexican forces, turned in a cheer-raising ride on Azteca to record the most perfect performance of the afternoon. Riding like one possessed, Villareal literally booted Azteca over each and every one of the difficult jumps, which ranged in height from four to five feet and in character from brush to ramps and aikens without a riding fault. His time for the course was 1 minute, 26 seconds, one and two-fifths seconds over the time limit, which gave him a quarter fault.

Curtis Rides Well.

Capt. M. H. Matteson was first on the course astride Ugly, a very dependable performer as a whole. For some reason, Ugly could not do so well with the tough going, toppling over a 4-foot gate which formed the second obstacle, then the aiken, another gate and the ramp. What with overtime and knockdowns, Matteson aquired a total of 16¼ faults.

Lieut. J. O. Curtis, a fledgling at this tough riding business, was the next United States equestrian to try his hand. He was mounted on Renzo, which was voted the champion jumper of the international teams, and knocked down only the chicken coop and final pole, which was set at 5 feet and provided a series of thrills for the spectators. His time was under the limit and his total faults only eight.

Lieut. R. W. Curtis fared not so well on Don. His time was slow and he fairly bowled over the jumps to accumulate 23¾ faults—the most collected by the riders from the United States.

Even at that point, the Chileans were practically eliminated, but then came a superb bit of business on Dakota, a natural-born clown which frisked about under Maj. J. T. Cole. Cole rode carefully throughout, curbing Dakota's natural skittishness to clear every jump but the last. His time was necessarily slow and with overtime he was given seven faults.

The Chileans, who entered the final day well within striking distance of the award, went hay-wire from the very outset. Chilena, one of their best horses, with Capt. Eduardo Yanez in the saddle, went around the course fast enough, but literally plowed through a flock of jumps to score 24 faults.

Lieut. Pelayo Izurietta, on Tonada, did much better, scoring only 12 faults, but Saltrera, ridden by Lieut. Rafael Montti, plowed through almost everything in sight to record a total of 32 faults.

Of course, but now, all hope was gone for the Chileans. Nevertheless, Capt. Yanez again took the course, this time on Toqui, and riding as though his team's success depended upon it, completed the ride without a fault until the last jump, which was caught by his mount's rear hoofs as it came down. That bit of happenstance marred his score, giving him four faults, but it was a great demonstration of great riding just for the sheer fun of it.

District Team Wins.

The District of Columbia stepped way ahead of both Virginia and Maryland to decisively win the interstate civilian team jumping contest. Margaret Cotter, on Rocksie, made only four faults and U. S. Randle's Randle's Pride was piloted about the course with only three and one-half faults to set the pace as the riders and mounts from the adjacent States fared not so well at all.

The Washington riders scored only 17½ faults yesterday, for a grand total of 60½ as Maryland was making 33 faults, for a total of 86½. Two Virginia horses were ruled off the course—one for losing the course and the other for three refuses, to put the Old Dominion entry entirely out of the running.

Fenton Fadeley's Lacquer Lady needed but the third place it took in the open jumping class to clinch the jumper championship and Mrs. John Hay Whitney's Gray Knight was awarded the hunter championship.

The usual colorful military ceremonies, the usual presentation of awards by dignitaries and the usual pleasing exhibition of dressage horse by Maj. Hiram Tuttle, of Fort Riley, kept the crowd well occupied and entertained between the running of the competitive classes.

Generals, V.M.I. Loom As State Title Threats

By the Associated Press.

Richmond, Va., Oct. 25.—Washington and Lee and V. M. I. stood today as the major barriers facing Virginia Tech in the Gobblers' battle for retention of the State football championship.

The University of Virginia, with an even break in two title contests, still has a slim chance at the crown, but two other members of the "big six," William and Mary and Richmond, were virtually eliminated by defeats and ties.

Roanoke College's strong Maroons, who tripped the Indians yesterday and tied Richmond earlier in the season, had their chances nipped by Tech's triumph in the opener.

The picture will be cleared considerably Saturday when the Cavaliers get their crucial test against V. M. I. at Lexington and Richmond journeys to Blacksburg for an engagement with the Old Dominion champs.

Roanoke Tops List.

Other State elevens will have foreign opposition Saturday with the Washington and Lee-Duke clash at Richmond headlining the list.

The Emory and Henry Wasps, who have been unable to win a single game as yet, will carry their campaign against Marshall College at Bluefield. Coach Billy Laval's charges bowed by 20-0 to Oglethorpe at Atlanta yesterday.

Roanoke, a stalwart among the State teams which have been generally battered by foes from beyond the border, topped the general standing with four wins, a tie and one loss. Back from a 13-0 conquest at William and Mary, the first in 13 years, the Maroons made preparations to entertain Pedie Jackson's King College gridmen at Salem.

Jackets Drop Another.

Randolph-Macon's mystery team dropped another to a surprised University of Delaware eleven, 19-6, and will play Johns Hopkins at Baltimore next week-end. The veteran Jacket aggregation which kept its slate clean in 1935 has been unable to get going this season with only one victory in six starts on the record to date.

Juniata smashed Bridgewater's spotless record at Washington by 25-0. The Eagles will attempt to get back in the victory column against American at home Saturday.

The V. M. I. squadron, which had been grounded since the impressive triumph over South Carolina back in September, soared impressively to a 20-0 win over a strong Richmond eleven, and Washington and Lee extended its string of wins over Virginia to six by trouncing the Cavaliers, 13-0, at Charlottesville in the other games yesterday.

Indian Spring Host to D. C. Golfers

If you should walk into the offices of the District Government buildings today and tomorrow, and discover there's no one around—blame it all on golf.

For out at Indian Spring Country Club the annual District Employes golf championship opens today, with around 150 of the Government leaders participating.

Commissioner George Allen, who is the uncrowned champion at Burning Tree, and loves his golf like a Scotchman his toddy, will be prominent among the contestants. Commissioner Dan Sultan, not quite as proficient with the mashie, niblick and putter as Commissioner Allen, also will be on the first line.

Richard S. ("Stand Up and Salute") Tennyson, assistant superintendent of playgrounds, is chairman, will accept post entries at the first tee, make up the foursome and the handicaps, and also attempt to do a little playing himself. Tennyson is a former Cleland Cup (sports writers) champion, having won it the first time he ever hit a golf ball.

A special detachment of greenkeepers has been assisted by Indian Springs' professional, George Diffenbaugh, to replace the tide of divots which will flow over the course today and tomorrow

Northwestern Looms as Big Barrier in Minnesota's Path

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Oct. 25.—Mighty Minnesota trained its big guns on the sharp-clawed Northwestern Wildcat today, apparently the one big remaining barrier in the Gopher's relentless march to Big Ten and national championship honors.

The Minnesota Powerhouse invades Evanston next Saturday for a battle with Northweatern which looms as one of the greatest "naturals" of the season. The Gopher's 33 to 0 massacre of courageous Perdue Saturday and Northwestern's easy 13 to 2 win over Illinois left both clubs undefeated and untied in four starts.

Play Iowa, Wisconsin.

After the Northwestern clash only Iowa and Wisconsin remain on Minnesota's Western Conference schedule and at this time neither can be figured to halt the Bernie Bierman juggernaut. Northwestern, after next Saturday, must face Wisconsin and Michigan, and on the Wildcat performance thus far the Badgers and Wolverines will be decided underdogs. So the Wildcat-Gopher tussle has distinct "championship" color.

Minnesota, supposed to be "on the spot" against Purdue, won its twenty-first straight game and stretched its unbeaten streak to two.

Too much Minnesota reserve strength brought about the Boilermaker downfall. In the last half Gopher reserve backs scampered through large gaps in the Purdue forward wall. The Minnesota touchdowns were by Uram, Alfonse, W. Rork, Matheny and Buhler.

Use Straight Football.

Northwestern, led by Heap and Geyer, scored two touchdowns much as it pleased to down Illinois without exertion. Straight football was used almost entirely by the victors.

Ohio State downed stubborn Indiana, 7 to 0, on a pass, Dye to Capt. Wendt. The Buckeyes next Saturday face Notre Dame, whipped by Pittsburgh. Indiana plays Iowa, which had an open date Saturday.

The victory-starved Wolverines defeated Columbia, 13 to 0, the first Wolverine triumph in four starts. Purdue invades Pittsburgh for a battle with Carnegie Tech while Illinois goes to Ann Arbor to take on Michigan. Chicago and Wisconsin, idle Saturday, clash at Madison.

By the Associated Press.

For the most part, the game was a brilliant punting duel between Al Masters of the Orioles and Jimmy West and Bill Ellis of the Arrows, each man averaging close to 40 yards from scrimmage line.

The Orioles, aided by a pass interseption by Jimmy Draper and subsequent line rushes got to the Arrows' 1-yard line in the second period but failed to get the ball across. The Arrows, early in the third period had two scoring opportunities but the closest they came to the Oriole goal line was the 5-yard line.

Alexandria Celtics Beat Clancys, 7-0

Norfolk, Va., Oct. 25 (AP).—The St. Mary's Celtics of Alexandria handed the Norfolk Clancys their second successive defeat at Bain Field today, 7 to 0. A crowd estimated at 3,000 saw the game.

The Clancys made a brilliant goal line stand in the third period when the invading eleven drove to the one-foot line only to be repulsed Andy Zeher got off a punt that was good for 47 yards. Bill Parish, who received the kick, was knocked down and Umpire Williams ruled interference and the ball was given to the visiting eleven on the Clancy 15. Dunlap fired a pass to Ab Wright, who took the ball on the seven and fought his way through Clancy tacklers to score. Bomba added the extra point via placement.

Clancy threatened in the second quarter when Jimmy Stewart recovered a fumble on Alexandria's one-foot line. Mike Cavish carried the ball to the line and fumbled. The ball rolled into the end zone and was recovered by a Celtic player for a touchdown.

Tigers Renew Feud With W. M.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Hampden-Sydney, Va., Oct. 25.—One of the oldest football feuds in the history of Hampden-Sydney will reach another milestone when the Tigers tackle William and Mary at Williamsburg Saturday.

The Indans first set foot on Death Valley in 1894, but were routed, 28 to 0. Not until 1899 did the two teams meet again, this time in Indian territory, with Hampden-Sydney only saving its scalp by the narow margin of 6 to 0.

In 27 contests betwen the two institutions, the Tigers hold the upper hand, counting 19 victories to the Indian's 8. However,, they have not won since 1920.

One of the oddities of the records is the fact that the Indians and the Tigers met twice a season during five years. There have been no ties.

After Rockne, Decline

Coach's Death Hurt Irish Teams

By Paul Mickelson.

Associated Press Sports Writer.

South Bend, Ind., Oct. 25.—It has been five years since Knute Rockne crashed to his death on the Kansas prairie, but at no time, perhaps, has Notre Dame missed the great football master as it did today.

For the sixth successive season of the post Rockne era the fighting Irish dream of national football recognition, a goal the immortal strategist crossed so often, lay buried in the debris of a humiliating 26-to-0 defeat by Pittsburgh after a start that hinted Notre Dame was heading its way back to the glorious crest.

The crushing defeat, most decisive setback suffered by the Irish since Army whipped them, 27 to 0, in 1925, unquestionably reduced Notre Dame's once proud football spirit to an all-time low. And you can't blame them for feeling downhearted.

During Rockne's 13-year command of the South Bend gridiron stalwarts, Notre Dame won 105 games, lost 12 and tied 5. Under Hunk Anderson, who led the team three seasons, and Elmer Layden, in his third season as coach, the Irish have lost 14. That's two more lost in less than six seasons than Rockne's elevens dropped in 13.

1. The loss of Rockne and his amazing personality.

2. The fotball consciousness of other universities, large and small, who no longer sit idly by and watch stars in their territory pack their grip sacks and catch the first train for South Bend.

3. Stiffer scholastic requirements at Notre Dame.

Of the three answers, Rockne's loss unquestionably is the biggest. Layden has done a great job, picking up the Irish spirit and doing an excellent bit of coaching but he doesn't pretend to be a Rockne.

When "Rock was at the helm, boys the Nation over were crazy to go to Notre Dame so they could play under the great master, an artist in coaching and a wizard in human nature. To play under Rockne was a coveted goal for thousands of embrio football stars—and even for many who somehow couldn't make their high school teams. Rockne took scores of high school failures and made them stars of first magnitude. Notre Dame was a football shrine.

Without Rockne to lure them, players began listening to advantages to be gained by playing for their home State universities and colleges. Football conscious, with alumni and the celebrated "lunatic fringe" demanding action, these schools recruited many "home town sensations" for their banners. Other far distant schools did likewise, and the steady flow of talent to the campus of the golden dome decreased.

Scholastically, Notre Dame is sterner than most colleges. In addition to following the Big Ten standards, the university, since Rockne's passing, has adopted the eight semester rule.

Silver Spring Wins.

The Silver Spring Merchants defeated the Seaman Gunners, 6 to 2, yesterday on the District Line field. Bob Hughes scored the winning touchdown, when he intercepted a pass by Geulique and raced 60 yards for the score.

Spiders Hope To Upset Tech Saturday

Richmond Is Seeking to Dissipate Virginia Tech's Grid Jinx.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Richmond, Va., Oct. 24.—Jumping from the frying pan into the fire, Richmond's Spiders after a very tough afternoon with V. M. I. faced perhaps an even harder test against Virginia Tech at Blacksburg next Saturday.

There will be no Andy Trzeciak, Billy Roberson or Wayt Clark to pester the Red and Blue but ways and means of stopping, or trying to stop, "Foots" Dickerson and Mel Henry were causing Coach Glenn Thistlethwaite and his board of strategy considerable alarm.

The Spiders have never had the pleasure of licking V. P. I. but they came very close to doing it in their last meeting and, if the aerial attack clicks, may give the lads at Blacksburg an afternoon full of worries.

Fullback play will be perhaps the highlight of the game with both schools offering first class line crashers. In Foots Dickerson, the Techmen consider themselves the possessor of perhaps the finest fullback in the Southern Conference but Richmond is proud, too, of its Sophomore Clyde Pendleton, a lad who seldom fails to gain yardage.

Another comparison between the two teams will be found in the fact that both rely on a power attack for yardage, but both use many passes in an effort to loosen up the opposition.

Tech will have the edge in experience with ten veterans scheduled to start while the Spiders planned to use at least five sophomores in the starting eleven. Coach Thistlethwaite said he hoped to have the injured Johnny Spier, of Logan, W. Va., ready for action next Saturday, but had no hope that the ace flankman, Jack Sanford would be ready.

Rivers Is Favored to Beat Confident Scott in Fight Tonight

District Lightweight Is Facing a Rival With a Potent Right.

Cowboy Howard Scott, lightweight champion of the District, has declared his intention of tonight either proving or disproving the old adage which says something about still rivers running deep.

"By the time I get through banging Joe Rivers, he will be a very still rivers, indeed," insists Scott, who is making a boastful prediction about tonight's main bout at Turner's Arena for the first time since he has been fighting here.

"If still rivers run deep, then Joe will be running way under the ring to keep me from hitting him again," contends the Cowpuncher. "Which, after all, is perhaps the best thing he can do. If he stays in the ring with me, I'll knock him out—so he'd better start doing some deep running if he expects to remain rightside up."

Rivers Is Favored.

Although the betting odds on the fight still remain at even money, the vast majority of lovers of larrup are of the opinion that any knocking out will be done by Rivers—or not at all. Joe swings a very virile right hand and if one of his minature Max Baer belts hits Scott on the noggin, the erstwhile cow-annoyer may very well expect to find himself in a recumbent position while the referee takes the numbers from one to ten.

Joseph has been doing very well by the Riverses since his last appearance here, when he dropped a very close decision to Featherweight Champion Pete Sarron. Away from the Capital he has scored over Joe Fogeletti, Young Raspi, Danny London, Jimmy Tramberia, Norment Quarles and goodness knows who else. His best performance here was against Mike Belloise, recognized as featherweight champion in some States, whom he knocked cold in two rounds.

Scott vs. Friedman.

Buddy Scott, lightheavyweight brother of Howard, will be seeking another knockout victory in a semi-final scheduled for six rounds. Buddy's opponent will be Jakie Friedman, a rugged Baltimorean, who possesses enough wallop to turn the tables on the largest of the Scotts.

Bobby (Double) Dechter and oJe Temes, a couple of bartenders, will have it out for the bartenders' championship of the District in another six-rounder. Ray Ingram and Joey Staiger will settle their differences in another bout scheduled for half a dozen rounds.

Post Predictions.

Main bout—Howard Scott, lightweight champion of the District, vs. Joe Rivers, California; lightweights; ten rounds. Rated C. Scott has done it twice before and should be able to do it again without too much trouble.

Semifinal—Buddy Scott, Washington, vs. Jake Friedman, Baltimore; light-heavyweights; six rounds. Rated C. Scott will find the weak spot on Friedman's chin to add another knockout to his string.

Preliminaries—Boxy Dechter, Washington, vs. Joe Temes, Washington; lightweights; six rounds. Rated C. Dechter is too cute for Temes.

Ray Ingram, Washington, vs. Joey Staiger, Tampa; lightweights; six rounds. Rated C. Staiger is highly touted and he'll have to be to beat Ingram in his present condition. Staiger.

Cardinal, Trinity Win Loop Games

Scoring a big upset, the Cardinal A. C. yesterday spilled the favored Palace A. C., 7 to 2, in a National City 150-pound class league game at Seat Pleasant, Md. The Trinity A. C. also came through with a league victory, pasting a 7-0 defeat on the Arlington A. C. at Ballston, Va.

The Palace elevn took a 2-0 lead when Feary, left end, blocked a Cardinal punt and the ball bounced into the end zone where a Cardinal man recovered for a safety. With two minutes to play, the Cards recovered a fumble and then opened a steady march with C. Basiliko carrying the ball across for the winning touchdown.

Trinity likewise scored a breath-taking victory. After battling Arlington on even terms, Trinity scored in the few remaning moments of the fourth quarter when Fullback Gissell fired a long pass to Viano, Trinity end, who made the score. Gissell scored the extra point.

From the 26 members of the squad the varsity team is chosen for each of Sweet Briar's intercollegiate games during the season. Miss Julia Turner Worthington, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Y. Worthington, jr., and Miss Genevieve Wilder Marsh, daughter of Mr. Charles M. Marsh, of Chevy Chase, have just been chosen for this year's varsity squad.

The varsity schedule for this year will include only two intercollegiate matches, the first of which will take place Saturday at Sweet Briar with Harrisonburg State College, and the second of which is scheduled for November 14 with Westhampton in Richmond. A match will also be played between the Western Virginia team including Sweet Briar players and the Eastern Virginia team on November 21.

Little, Thomson, Smith to Play at Quantico Course Tomorrow

Marines Host To Famous Golfers

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Quantico, Va., Oct. 25.—Golf-minded folk of Quantico, Fredericksburg and nearby towns are all worked up over the demonstration-exhibition which Horton Smith, Lawson Little and Jimmy Thomson—three of golfdom's most famous figures—will put on Tuesday at Quantico Marines' pine-studded and rolling course.

The 18-hole match, which will be preceded by a half hour lesson on golf, will start at 2 p. m. and will find the world's number one driver, Thomson, teaming with Capt. Stanley Ridderhof, crack Marine golfer and holder of the course record, against the powerhouse combination of Smith and Little.

Lieut. Comdr. P. J. Malloran, chairman of the Marine golf committee, is responsible for the appearance of these three celebrated shotmakers, having gotten in touch with Spalding's, the sponsor, shortly after watching Thomson, Smith and Little play with Wiffy Cox in the exhibition match witnessed by more than 6,000 spectators a few weeks ago at Kenwood's course in Washington.

With the exhibition open to the public—no admission being charged—Chairman Halloran is making arrangements for a crowd of at least 4,000. Some 500 Washingtonians are expected to attend.

Golf Lesson as Well.

The gallery will be controlled by a special Marine detail dressed in snappy uniforms. Assisting Lieut. Comdr. Halloran are Lieut. H. E. Gillespie, U. S. N.; Lieut. Col. G. D. Jackson, U. S. M. C., field marshal; Capt. R. W. Culpepper, U. S. M. C., and Capt. A. D. Colley, U. S. M. C., who will act as referee. Maj. M. C. Gregory, U. S. M. C., will direct the entertainment and the reception for the three famous golfers, assisted by Mrs. Jackson and Mrs. Halloran.

At least 2,500 Marines will see the match, which will fetaure the "Navy Day" activities at Quantico. Starting at 1:30, the putting wizard, Smith, will step to a portable microphone and tell the golfing public all about the shots which Little and Smith will demonstrate. A special sound-equipped truck will roll over the hills and dales of this nine-hole, par 36 course, with a competent authority on golfing calling shot for shot.

The Quantico course stretches 5,900 yards. The best score ever made there is a 69, fashioned by Clyde DePishon, one-time Quantico pro. Capt. Ridderhof's 71 is low among the amateurs.

Yesterday Little, Thomson and Smith appeared in a similar exhibition in Richmond. They are expected in Quantico tomorrow night.

Duke, Duquesne Biggest Victims

same field. It was all the more puzzling in view of Friday's rude awakening for the neighboring "Dukes," who yielded by a 2-to-0 score to West Virginia Wesleyan in tumbling from football's merry-go-round.

Against the Irish, Pitt displayed the defensive skill and even more of the offensive charge that it employed to whip Ohio State two weeks earlier.

The Panthers will have a chance next Saturday to consolidate their claims to a top Eastern rating by taking on Fordham, conquerer of St. Mary's Gaels yesterday and one of the few remaining unbeaten-untied combinations in the seaboard sector. Pitt's opportunity to get a Rose Bowl bid is alive again, at any rate.

St. Mary's dropped from the unbeaten ranks by a 1-point margin, 7-6, as Fordham's stout-hearted defense proved more than a match for the galloping Gaels from the West Coast.

A Battle in Store.

Northwestern, pointing for the crucial conflict with Minnesota, took Illinois in stride, 13 to 2. The Wildcats gave the Gophers a scare last season and have been traveling at a faster pace this fall. Whether the two Dons, Heap and Geyer, can succeed where Isbell and Drake of Purdue failed remains to be seen. Minnesota likewise appears to have reached a peak, after starting slowly, so that the touchdown race at Evanston on Saturday should be something to see.

Ohio State gained its first Big Ten victory and first triumph in three straight matches by downing Indiana, 7 to 0, while Michigan ended its losing streak at the expense of the Columbia Lions. The Wolverines upset their Eastern rivals, 13 to 0, for the second straight year and administered a blow to the "Ivy League's" bid for intersectional prestige.

Catholic U. Tumbles.

Princeton pulled a hidden ball play from its bag of tricks to turn back the Navy, 7 to 0, and recover some of the prestige lost the week before. The Tigers tackle Harvard this week.

Cornell's youthful team out-scored Penn State, 13 to 7, for its third triumph in four starts, and now challenges Columbia.

Duke's downfall in the South projects Tulane and Louisiana State as rivals for Dixie's top ranking this week. Tulane knocked North Carolina's Tarheels from the unbeaten class with another impressive victory, 21 to 7. Louisiana State whipped Arkansas, 19 to 7.

Mississippi turned in an intersectional conquest at the expense of another previously unbeaten team, Catholic University of Washington, D. C., 20 to 0. One of the day's main surprises was the "moral triumph" for Vanderbilt in holding Georgia Tech to a scoreless tie.

How Backfield Heroes Are Made—Lesson No. 1

Tech-Western Series Contest Heads 8-Game Card for Week

With two interhigh games topping the program, 13 high schools and prep schools of the Washington area will battle on the gridiron this week. Only three of the 13 face out-of-town foes, as the remainder renew or begin local rivalries.

The Tech-Western interhigh conflict tomorrow in Tech Stadium gives the week a gala sendoff. It will be the first game of the series for the Techmen and of warm interest, due to the unknown quality of the Maroon.

Whether Coach Hap Hardell has an outfit capable of regaining Tech's championship heights of two years ago is a moot question, and the Western game should do much to answer it. Flushed by an easy victory over Roosevelt, and featuring a razzle-dazzle attack, bulwarked with a pair of fast stepping backs in Leonard Weinstein and Morris Snead, Western is all set to hand the Maroon an afternoon of trouble, despite the 24-to-0 defeat it suffered at the hands of Tech last year.

On Friday, Eastern trots out to meet Roosevelt in Roosevelt Stadium, both teams having suffered defeat in their first series starts. Eastern should rate a heavy choice to win, however.

Woodrow Wilson High, unbeaten and untied in the first two games of its history, seeks to pile up its third straight win against a powerful Landon Prep team at Landon, also on Friday. On the same day, Georgetown Prep and St. Alban's renew their traditional rivarly, at St. Alban's, and Friends School meets Woodward Prep.

Coach Johnny Baker's powerful Washington-Lee High eleven meets Woodberry Forest Academy in Orange, Va., in another Friday contest and Episcopal High, of Alexandria, seeks to maintain its great 1936 undefeated record by taking on McDonough School of Baltimore, at Episcopal, on Saturday.

St. John's High, of Washington, meets a strong Calvert Hall team at Baltimore in the eighth game of the week, also on Saturday.

Heurich's Goes Into Soccer Loop Lead

By virtue of goal average, Heurich's stepped into the Recreation Soccer League lead yesterday after defeating Silver Spring, 7-0. Sun Radio is even with Heurich's on points, the champions also having an easy victory over Democrats, 5-1. Marlboro surprised the visiting German Sports Club kickers and won, 3-2, while the Italian-Americans just managed to trounce George's Radio, 1-0.

Something of a Middle Atlantic individual record was set in the Heurich's game, where Louis Gunn, Heurich center-forward, scored seven goals. In spite of the large score, Harding, Silver Spring goalkeeper, stopped many hard and difficult shots in fine style, Blanche and B. Sienuta trying strenuously to duplicate the feat of their dashing teammate. Most of Gunn's goals were from single-handed runs and none were savable, the defensive fault resting with the fullbacks rather than the goalkeeper.

James Cross Loft Wins Race From Pittsburgh

The James Cross loft won the pigeon race from Pittsburgh, Pa., yesterday. Because of bad weather, 15 of the 20 lofts competing failed to report at the finish. D. C. Hartley, last week's winner, placed second.

James Cross, 876.64; D. C. Hartley, 875.65; W. J. Fieratein, 867.84; Mount Rainier Loft, 862.60; Morris and Bro., 851.88.

Eagle Streak Ended.

The Northwest Trojans defeated the Petworth Eagles, 135-pound champions of the city, 8 to 0, yesterday. It was the first defeat for the Eagles in three years. Ostanow ran 50 yards for a Trojan touchdown.

Volney Burnett Beats McAleer To Win Indian Spring Golf Title

Volney Burnett, the fighting fireman, made a fighting finish yesterday to defeat Earl McAleer 1 up in a 36-hole final to retain his Indian Spring Country Club golf championship.

Three down to the left-handed golf ace at the end of the morning round, Burnett played the next 18 holes in even par to win on the last green with a par 4.

In top form, McAleer fired a subpar 33 on the first nine in the morning, as Burnett's even par 35 was good enough only to put him 2 down to his rival. McAleer returned in 38 to Burnett's 39, as Volney missed numerous greens, and the champion faced a 3-hole deficit at intermission.

Then the fireman put on the proverbial steam, rushed through the afternon's first nine in 2 under 4s for a 34, and went to the twenty-eighth 1 down. McAleer took the thirteenth with a par 4, dropped the fourteenth and sixteenth, where the match was squared. Burnett got home in orthodox figures on the home hole, and McAleer's best was a 5.

George Voigt, semifinalist in the National Amateur at Garden City and former Washington golf star, will return to familiar scenes next Sunday to play in the Brightwood Ex-Caddies Golf Association tournament at Beaver Dam Country Club. Some 70 are expected to compete.

Generals Meet Duke Eleven Saturday

Lexington, Va., Oct. 25.—With their first conference game behind them, Washington and Lee's football team looked forward today to their second trip over the Blue Ridge in two weeks when they travel to Richmond Saturday to meet Duke there for the second straight year.

Last year it was Duke that in the second game of the season set back Washington and Lee's hopes of another conference title by a decisive 26-to-0 victory. This year it is Washington and Lee that appears in the giant-killing role with Duke as the heavy favorite.

Washington and Lee has never beaten a Wade-coached Duke team and to observers it appeared that the Generals' chances of victory, though slim, depended upon whether their heavy, powerful line could stop the Blue Devils' strong running attack, led by Capt. Ace Parker and "Honey" Hackney.

Turning to the record of the series, short one that it is, it reveals that Washington and Lee has only been able to take Duke's measure once—that a 12-to-7 victory in 1927.

New England Lad Starts with only 3 Cents—Becomes Millionaire Publisher!!

Few stories of American business success are as fascinating as the rise to fame and fortune of Cyrus H. K. Curtis, the Portland, Maine, newspaper boy who became one of the world's richest publishers.

It was on July Fourth, 1862, that 12-year old Cyrus Curtis embarked upon his business career. That day, soldiers were leaving Portland for the Civil War battlefields. Patriotism was at a high pitch! Flags, cheers and explosions of fireworks filled the air. Young Curtis was eager to join in the fun—but, he had only three cents.

Meeting a newsboy who wanted to sell out and celebrate, Curtis bought his last three papers at a cent a copy. Quickly, he sold the papers at three cents each, bought more copies and sold them, too. That evening, part of his profits went for firecrackers, but the rest went into his pocket—he had tasted the joy of earning money and made up his mind to be a regular newspaper boy.

Soon, young Curtis, like Edison, had saved enough to buy a printing press and publish his own paper, but fire destroyed his equipment and he had to fall back upon a newspaper job at $3.00 a week. Again he saved and bought a press, and again fire wiped him out.

Not until he was 26 years of age, did fortune first smile upon him. Starting with a small farm paper, he built an immense publishing enterprise, which owns three great national magazines, and at one time controlled a group of metropolitan newspapers, and did a gross business of $100,000,000 a year.

With all his wealth and prominence, Curtis never forgot that his millions were built from a three-cent investment in newspapers, and that the development of his extraordinary ability as a publisher dated back to his early experiences as a newspaper boy.

The Black Automatic

By William Byron Mowery

Through the plane window Noel gazed down at the mountains under keel, at the appalling panorama of ice and snow and rock, and he understood why the Dinokui Indians had come down through the centuries without being swamped by the neighboring Tenneh tribe. With no trails or canoe streams leading in, the country was impossible to any creature without wings. The Silvertips were no orderly range, but a huge jumble of individual mountains, and the canyon-narrow valleys were impenetrably choked with buckbrush and tremendous talus slides.

Off to the north he caught occasional glimpses of the Dinokui River, plunging and stair-stepping out of the mountains to fling itself into the slow Mackenzie. Its galloping white waters and thundering overfalls made it look like a canoeist's nightmare, a river to hurl back the boldest of northern prospectors.

In the mechanic's place beside Strap, young Tah-Gomaugh, wrapped in blankets and braced up with a strychnine hypodermic, was guiding the Bellanca straight northwest across that savage country to the Dinokui camp. The icy winds and treacherous air chasms kept Strap busy as he skimmed low over the glacier fields and sailed high above the canyon-valleys. In the rear place beside Thomkins, Constable Brannigan sat hunched over the medicine chest, so frightened by the wild region and the 15,000 foot height that he had pulled his hat down and would not look out.

Occasionally Noel glanced at Harla, beside him, and was glad for her sake that this cold bumpy flight would soon be over. She looked very tired—nearly exhausted by all she had gone through in the stormy hours past. Her eyelids drooped heavily and she was unconsciously leaning against his shoulder. Apparently she had no suspicion that he had tricked her and was marooning her in these mountains till he finished with Flood.

She seemed almost a totally different girl from the Harla De Long, who had sat beside him on the Diomede flight. Then he had clothed her with hope and wish, but that had dropped now, and he could regard her with impersonal detachment. For that he was glad. No more snubbings or bitter disappointments or suspicions that cut like a whip. A day at this Dinokui camp, possibly a day or two later on at Manitou, and then their trails would separate. And for that, too, he was glad. He felt that only when he was many months and half a continent away from her could he really begin to forget.

Through the wisp cirrus clouds a great bowl-shaped basin in the mountains loomed up ahead. Nearly 30 miles long and 20 wide, the basin was like a low, sheltered amphitheater—an area of verdant green in an immensity of ice and snow. From a big moraine lake on the northwest the Dinokui River coiled down through the middle of that beautiful valley. A peaceful blue stream there, the river seemed to be taking a deep, quiet breath before its mad canyon dash to the Mackenzie.

The Bellanca sped nearer and the valley opened up wider, sunlit and lovely. Protected from winter storms, walled in against marauding Tenneh tribes, the lush lasin looked like as fine a hunting grounds as any Indian heart could wish. What a sanctuary, centuries ago, to that lost and wandering band of old Algonquins. Little wonder that they had stayed there, down across the ages.

The isolation of the place made him question how a sickness of the contagious type could have broken out among the Dinokuis. The flare-ups along the much-traveled Three Rivers were understandable, but this one was a puzzzler. Nobody ever came back into this region. Not a person there at Manitou had ever set foot on the Dinokui range.

The Bellanca swam in between two towering pinnacles and tilted sharply downward into the basin. Tah-Gomaugh pointed at the southeastern end of the valley at a mid-river island surrounded by a flock of small islets like a duck with an argosy of fledglings.

"Camp there," he grunted.

As the plane dropped down in whistling spirals, Noel saw two thin streams of campfire smoke standing up from the pineclad island, and then the Dinokui village took on outline. Covering about 5 acres, the village was laid out with geometric precision in form of an oblong, and from the air its pattern seemed true to the inch. A wide stone wall enclosed the whole place. Within the wall were two semicircles of buildings, and in the exact middle was a huge cross of flat stonework.

The sight of the village had roused Harla from her weariness. Gripping Noel's arm in excitement, she was gazing down, wide-eyed, staring first from one window and then the other as the plane spiraled.

"Noel! Look! Stone houses! And look—on those little islets—at those rock mounds! Those are burial cairns. Look at their designs—fish and bird and animal! Noel, look!"

He was thankful for her excitement. Flood and Jimmy and Manitou were temporarily crowded out of her mind. "But heaven pity me," he thought, "when and if she wakes up and realizes I tricked her. She'll probably use me for target practice before she goes after Flood."

As the Bellanca glided over the village at 500 feet, he saw that one of the smoke threads came from a cluster of small dwellings in the upper part of the village. The other smoke rose from a large circular house, half underground and roofed with logs, in the lower semicircle. From what Tah-Gomaugh had told him at Manitou, he knew that the large structure was the men's kozgee or ceremonial hall, where the men had gathered and were going through their rituals to appease the evil familiars.

A dozen men and some 50-odd women and children had come out into the sun and were staring in wordless consternation at the huge bird-beast which had thundered out of the sky and descended upon their village. But none of them fled or picked up weapons or even moved. The red death striking and striking at them had so dazed them with grief that they cared little about anything else.

From the open cabin door Noel looked the village over, planning what to do. Hard hit though it was, the camp was not nearly so stricken as he had feared. A good part of the band were still well, and most of the sick ones were able to stagger around. The contagion seemed to have taken one of its queer turns here and was running a mild varioloid course. If it had struck with its usual deadliness among Indians, there would hardly be a soul alive of this band.

He gave instructions:

"Strap, you and Thomkins patrol this island and see that nobody leaves it. Keep a special watch on those birch bark canoes across yonder. I noticed that a dozen of them are loaded with food and weapons, ready to go. Sometime toward evening you two will have to whip back to Manitou so that you can guide Clevenger's police detail in.

"Brannigan, you tote the supplies ashore and stand by to help Harla. She'll take the upper half of this camp and I'll look after the men.

"Harla, we'll get these people out of those dank houses into the warm air. Then we'll vaccinate. Then we'll see about medicine and food. They're all demoralized here. From the looks of things, they haven't had anything to eat in days. But first, you and I had better take Tah-Gomaugh ashore and establish diplomatic relations."

He carried the sick Tah-Gomaugh through the shallows, and with the young Indian between them, he and Harla walked slowly up a black stone path to the center of the cross.

"Stop here," Tah-Gomaugh bade, uneasy, a bit uncertain about the welcome that his people were going to give his white friends.

On the Air Today

A contrast in radio program technique will be offered this week when the "National Farm and Home Hour" celebrates its tenth anniversary. Today (WMAL, at 12:30) Johnny Wolf, musician and actor, will present one of his old-time sketches in characteristic garbled dialect. It was in response to one of his comic recitations of "Little Red Riding Hood" that the Farm and Home Bugle skit was started more than four years ago.

Mrs. Frances McMahon, "the happy harmonica lady," one of the first artists on the program, will play the old favorites, "Virginia Reel" and "Wreck of the Old No. 97."

Tomorrow the original eight-piece orchestra, the Homesteaders, will be brought together for one selection followed by a number by the present 30-piece orchestra under direction of Walter Blaufuss. Other early features will be presented throughout the week.

Graham MacNamee will soon appear again with Ed Wynn, the comedian. Wynn begins a new air series over NBC November 14 permitting a reunion of the two on the air.

It is generally understood that MacNamee was offered a handsome sum to work with Wynn in his recent series over a Columbia network, but the announcer turned it down because of the necessity of severing his connections with N. B. C. Announcer Young, of N. B. C., who did work the Columbia series with Wynn, has not been heard on the airways since.

The Wynn-MacNamee partnership was more or less an accident. When Wynn reported to the studios for his first broadcast four years ago he found MacNamee had been assigned to work on the program as announcer. One reading of the script convinced the comedian that he had been handed a "perfect foil."

Steel Activity Recedes From September Top

Cleveland, Ohio, Oct. 25.—Steelworks activity has receded slightly from its high peak of late September and early October, the national rate last week showing a decline of 2 points to 73 per cent, says Steel.

Operations in the Pittsburgh district were down 7 points to 70 per cent; Chicago 1½ to 74½; Youngstown 1 to 77; Wheeling 3 to 92; eastern Pennsylvania one-half to 48; Birmingham 2½ to 61½ and New England one-half to 75. The other districts were unchanged. At Chicago and Youngstown the declines were because of the need for repairing furnaces. Last year in the same week the national rate was 52½ per cent of capacity.

Further slight moderation is possible in the next few weeks, but from then on until the end of the year activity is expected to be strong. Shipping releases are being awaited by the mills for a great amount of material, particularly from automobile manufacturers. It is estimated that enough steel was placed on mill books to make 1,000,000 cars in the fourth quarter, but the great bulk of this has not yet been released.

Automobile production last week showed a gain of 11,545 units to 59,740. Although in the same week last year 62,015 cars were assembled, total output this month probably will be close to that of October, 1935.

The Market

By Carlton A. Shively
A Special Correspondent.

Business Gains Are Maintained as Markets Await Election Results.

New York, Oct. 25.—Financial markets last week were cut to the pattern of those of recent weeks. Prices ended about where they began, with brief periods of depression and exaltation and with a tendency for sales volume to decline in stocks. The only flurry that occurred was one of a half hour's duration toward the end of the week, occasioned by a slip in the French franc, quickly corrected.

Government bonds were inclined to ease, possibly on the exertions made by politicians to assure voters that, in the event of a New Deal victory, the increase in taxes would not by some miracle of hocus-pocus take place. Markets realize that it must be higher taxes, even though the budget continues in an unbalanced condition; but they do not relish the implications such as given in President Roosevelt's speech that not even a sincere attempt would be made to put the Government's finances in order.

Mostly the run of trade statistics was favorable. Railroad car loadings, output of electrical energy and, above all, corporation earnings statements for third quarter made a good impression. The steel industry has slipped a little, because orders from some consumers, notably the construction industry, have been held up pending the outcome of the election. Retail trade also has slowed down a little because of the warm weather, but there is no cause for worry on the score of public spending.

Bank Credit Rises.

Changes in the bank credit position as disclosed by the weekly statement of the Federal Reserve system, covering the period to October 21, point to a rise in speculative activity rather than to expansion of business on more conservative lines. Such an interpretation of the figures is based more on the evidence of the member banks in this district than on the mere figures as shown on the statements.

After several weeks of decline, brokers' loans last week rose $33,000,000. The action of the stock market, although strong at times, scarcely suggested any increase in loans based on higher prices. It would appear, therefore, that what has taken place has been a sale by outright holders to buyers who were operating on borrowed money. Admitting that as the election approaches the stock market is becoming more of a gamble, and particularly so in view of the rather strained proportion to earnings that current share prices bear, the expansion in loans seems largely to be sustained solely by a change in trading accounts. Perhaps much of it came from borrowing by bond dealers in connection with some of the recent heavy financing.

On the side of commercial loans, the expansion continued. In New York City the rise was about $15,000,000, a trend that began the middle of the summer. In the previous week the rise in New York was about half that for the member banks as a whole. While it is customary to regard expanding commercial loans as an indication of rising business activity, which is largely true, sometimes the expansion may result from trends which are not altogether favorable.

Motor Purchases.

There is reason at present to believe that a great deal of the half billion or more of rise in commercial loans in the past few months has come from the financing of sales, a roundabout way of extending credit to the manufacturer. Moreover, the bulk of the money is said to have gone to enable automobile purchasers to buy cars. The motor finance companies have borrowed from the banks, along with other finance companies, which help to carry installment buying.

There is nothing wrong about that in itself aside from the danger of overdoing it, but it might as well be recognized that our heavy industries, for the most part, are still backward in the recovery, which so far has been confined almost entirely to the quick consumption goods. The spur to those industries is coming from the general encouragement of spending set by the Government's example and from doles, bonuses and the like. Business has not yet begun to borrow appreciably to show its own confidence in the future. The individual wage earner with his increasing readiness to call on his expected future earnings is more cheerful about the outlook than is the business man with large capital to protect, which is natural enough.

Finance Advertising Sets Five-Year Peak

New York, Oct. 25 (AP).—Financial advertising lineage in nine leading New York newspapers for the first three quarters of the year totaled 3,358,668 lines, the largest for any corresponding period since 1931, Albert Frank-Guenther Law reported today. The 1935 figures represent an increase of 24 per cent over the lineage for the similar period of 1935, and 32 per cent over 1934.

Per Capita Tax Is Lower Here Than in Britain

New York, Oct. 25—On a per-capita basis, taxes in the United States are considerably lower than in the United Kingdom, according to a study made public today by the National Industrial Conference Board. For the fiscal year ended in 1935 the per-capita tax burden in the United States amounted to $75.67. This compares with a per-capita burden of $94.15 for the United Kingdom in the same year. According to these figures, per-capita taxes in the United Kingdom are approximately 24 per cent larger than in the United States.

In 1929-30 per-capita tax collections were $90.83 for the United Kingdom, $83.40 for the United States, $59.47 for France and $53.56 for Germany.

Since 1930 the per-capita tax burden has declined in the United States, Germany and France, but has increased in the United Kingdom. Per capita taxes in the United States amounted to $83.40 in the fiscal year 1930 as compared with $75.67 in 1935. During the same period the United Kingdom's per-capita tax burden advanced from $90.83 to $94.15.

Owing to currency fluctuations, it is difficult to give comparable dollar figures for Germany and France. The German per-capita tax burden, however, decreased from 224.87 reichsmarks in the fiscal year 1929-30 to 181.36 reichsmarks in the fiscal year 1934-35. In the same period the French per-capita tax burden declined from 1,517.1 francs to 1,160.8 francs.

Total United States taxes, Federal, State and local, estimated at 9,650 million for the fiscal year ended in 1935, were approximately 600 million less than the all-time peak of 10,266 million for the fiscal year 1930, a decline of 6 per cent.

In Germany, tax collections were 17 per cent lower in 1934-35 than in 1929-30, and in France they were 13 per cent lower. Tax collections in the United States, on the other hand, were 3 per cent larger in 1934-35 than in 1929-30.

Lumber Shipments Decrease in Week

The lumber industry during the week ended October 17, stood at 68 per cent of the 1929 weekly average of production and 70 per cent of 1929 shipments. Reported new orders continued to exceed output.

National production reported during the week ended October 17 of 7 per cent fewer mills was 6 per cent below revised production figures of the preceding week. Shipments were 1 per cent below, and new orders were 2 per cent below that week, according to reports to the National Lumber Manufacturers Association from regional associations covering the operations of important hardwood and softwood mills. Reported new business during the week ended October 17 was 6 per cent above production; shipments were on a par with output. Reported new business of the previous week was 2 per cent above production; shipments were 5 per cent below output.

Bank Stocks Decrease 1.81 Per Cent in Week

New York, Oct. 25.—New York City bank stocks closed the past week at lower levels, according to records compiled by Hoit, Rose & Troster. The aggregate market value of 16 leading issues on October 23 amounted to $1,981,562,000, compared with $2,017,978,000 at the close of the previous week, a decrease of $36,416,000, or 1.81 per cent.

The current average yield of the 16 issues of 3.32 per cent compares with a yield of 3.22 per cent on October 16. The current market value is now 1.48 times the known book value against 1.54 times a week ago. Based upon current figures, the 16 issues are now quoted at an average of 20.8 times their known earnings, compared with 22.1 times on October 16.

Costa Rica Suspends Interest on 2 Loans

New York, Oct. 25 (AP).—Temporary suspension of all interest and sinking fund payments on the Republic of Costa Rica 7 per cent and 5 per cent bonds was announced today by J. & W. Seligman & Co., fiscal agents for the two issues.

The firm announced receipt of information from the government of Costa Rica that, owing to unfavorable economic and financial conditions in the country, the government was no longer able to comply fully with terms of the offer to service its external bonds, made on July 10, 1935, through the foreign Bondholders Protective Council.

Farm Income Seen 81% Above 1932

New York, Oct. 25.—If the annual farm income in 1936 amounts to $7,850,000,000, as recently forecast by the Department of Agriculture, it will be 10.7 per cent larger than in 1935 and 81.4 per cent larger than in 1932 when farm income was at the low for the depression. As compared with the predepression year 1929, however, farm income in 1936 will be 25.1 per cent smaller, according to the Alexander Hamilton Institute.

On the assumption that prices paid by farmers for goods bought during the last quarter of 1936 will remain at the September level, the Government's estimate of farm income indicates that the farmers' purchasing power for the full year 1936 will be 11.6 per cent higher than in 1935 and 56.9 per cent higher than at the low for the depression in 1932. At the same time, it will be 7.3 per cent lower than in 1929.

Barber Is Busy All Day Sunday Despite Pickets

Police, Union Protesters and Traffic No Bar to Customers.

"Big Charley" Griffin continued to charge 35 cents for haircuts and 15 cents for shaves all day yesterday, as three score barbers picketed his shop at 408 Ninth street northwest, in an attempt to stop his operating on Sunday.

Griffin found the pickets no problem at all. Customers appeared in his three-chair shop faster than he and his two assistant barbers could serve them.

The pickets, who had effected three closures earlier in the day, became more perplexing to police than to Griffin. A dozen policemen appeared at various times to preserve the rights of pedestrians on the street, although there were more police than pedestrians.

Lieut. Horace Lineburg, of police headquarters, finally decreed all pickets must carry signs denoting themselves as such, and that only five union barbers could parade at a time, although their supporters were permitted to stand on the curb and offer encouragement.

Signs proved to be a one-hour problem until Charles J. Bovello, chairman of Local 239's campaign committee, ordered signs made with crayon and cardboard. This obstacle overcome, the picketing resumed.

Leo A. Rover, attorney for the barbers, expressed the opinion picketers need only tell pedestrians they were pickets and need not carry signs, but he conceded the point to Lieut. Lineburg.

Griffin explained he could never get the union price of 50 cents for a haircut and 35 cents for a shave. And as for working on Sunday, the law requires him to close only one day a week, he said, and he prefers Monday.

A. C. Needles, Head of N. & W., Is Dead at 69

Roanoke, Va., Oct. 25.—Arthur Chase Needles, who rose from railroad rodman to the presidency of the Norfolk & Western Railroad, died here today at the age of 69.

A native of Baltimore, Md., Needles went to work as a rodman with the Washington, Ohio & Southern Railroad when he was 15 years old.

A year later he held a similar position with the Norfolk & Western. Then he was successively yard clerk and brakeman, night and day yardmaster, superintendent, general manager, a vice president and then president of the line.

Needles was born January 10, 1867, at Baltimore, and was educated at Swarthmore College in Pennsylvania. He was married November 14, 1899, to Bessie Parker Williams, of Baltimore. She died in 1923. There was one son, John Oliver Needles, who survives. His second wife was Hortense Edith Clarke, of New York, to whom he was married in 1928.

Funeral services will be conducted at St. John's Episcopal Church here at 4 p. m. Tuesday by the Rev. Alfred R. Berkeley, pastor. Private burial services will be in Greenmount Cemetery, Baltimore, at 11 a. m. Wednesday.

Four Women Tied In Stork Marathon

Toronto, Ontario, Oct. 25 (U.P.).—Provincial Secretary Harry C. Nixon tonight ruled that no late registrations of births claimed by mothers competing for the $750,000 Charles Vance Millar maternity marathon prize would be recognized and thereby threw the strange race into an apparent four-way tie.

He said flatly that unless all claimed births had been registered at the time they occurred they would not be eligible for the cash bequest willed by the eccentric lawyer to the Toronto mother producing the most children during the ten years after his death October 31, 1926.

Nixon, final arbitrator for the vital statistics bureau, thus apparently eliminated Mrs. Grace Bagnato, 43, who claimed nine eligible children, and tied Mrs. Arthur H. Timlek, Mrs. John Nagle and Mrs. Pauline Mae Clark with Mrs. Matthew Kenny at ten children each, as leaders.

Mrs. Kenny had been leading with 12 claimed births, but it was believed two of the births were unregistered. Two children of Mrs. Bagnato also were unregistered, putting her far behind in the race.

$20,000,000 Gems, Valuables Moved

Boston, Oct. 25 (U.P.).—Under escort of State police and heavily-armed private guards, an estimated $20,000,000 in jewels, cash and other valuables of the late Col. Edward H. R. Green was transferred without incident today to the First National Bank here from South Dartmouth—some 60 miles distant.

Ten armored cars were required to move part of the fortune inherited by Green on the death of his famed mother, Hetty Green, once reputedly the wealthiest woman in the world.

Transfer of the precious cargo from Green's South Dartmouth estates to safe deposit vaults of the First National Bank represented another step in the State's battle to obtain inheritance and income taxes.

Green died June 8 in New York State. The Massachusetts angle in the case developed last month when State Tax Commissioner Henry F. Long petitioned New York courts for a hearing on its tax claims. Long argued Green was a legal resident of Mussachusetts.

Edith's New Trial Nears

Edith Maxwell Counsel to Seek Affidavits for Change of Venue

Charles Henry Smith to Leave Next Week for Wise in Effort to Obtain Support Among Citizens There for Shift in Scene of Second Trial.

Charles Henry Smith, eminent Alexandria attorney, will start for the Cumberland Mountains late next week to prepare for the second trial of Edith Maxwell, 22-year-old school teacher, on a charge of killing her father with a slipper.

Attorney Smith's first task will be to interview substantial citizens of Wise County and ask them to make out affidavits which might be used in an effort to hold the trial in some other county.

When Edith is called to trial a second time, November 16, in Wise, Attorney Smith will ask Circuit Judge H. A. W. Skeen for a change of venue. He will argue that because of publicity and feeling growing out of the first trial, it will be difficult, perhaps impossible, to get an impartial jury for the second trial.

He hopes to be able to back up his verbal argument with affidavits from representative citizens of Wise who agree it would be difficult to get an impartial jury in that county. Hence Attorney Smith's trip to the mountains at least ten days in advance of the trial date.

The gathering of these affidavits will cost money. So will printing of briefs, calling of defense witnesses, purchase of stenographic transcripts and other items in the forthcoming trial.

The Post is now raising a fund to meet these expenses. Contributions reported yesterday were:

Lora E. Cowell	$1.00
A. D. Phillips	1.00
H. V. McLeod	5.00
Total	$7.00

Total Now $263.

After Miss Maxwell was found guilty of first-degree murder and sentenced to 25 years in the penitentiary at her first trial, readers of The Post, aroused by harshness of the sentence, contributed $1,000 to finance a fight for a new trial. At the invitation of The Post, Charles Henry Smith offered to carry the case to the Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals.

This high court held the evidence did not justify the verdict of first-degree murder and the 25-year sentence, and ordered the new trial, which begins November 16.

Enclosed find—as a contribution to the Edith Maxwell Defense Fund to be used by The Washington Post in her retrial.

5 Convicts Escape In Texas; 2 Caught

Houston, Tex., Oct. 25 (A.P.).—Five convicts broke from a prison truck on a crowded street here tonight and the neighborhood immediately became the scene of a manhunt in which hundreds of Houstonians joined.

The five left behind 33 other convicts who refused to take part in the break.

Capt. H. W. Miller, manager of Retrieve Prison Farm, who was in charge of the group, said the convicts were en route back to the farm after a visit to Huntsville and the prison system's rodeo. The most desperate convicts in Texas are kept at Retrieve farm.

Two of the prisoners were recaptured a few minutes after the break. They were Clifton Davis and W. L. Mershon.

Capt. Miller said he and six guards in charge of the gang were afraid to shoot because of heavy traffic.

Names of the three convicts still at large were given as Lonnie Jackson, serving two 99-year terms; Noble Guthrie and Floyd Seay, serving a 50-year sentence.

Horseman Killed.

Buffalo, N. Y., Oct. 26 (A.P.).—Herbert Seay, 28, member of a prominent St. Louis family, was injured fatally today when a saddle horse reared and fell on him.

Contract Bridge

By Mrs. Ely Culbertson.

"Without exception the world's greatest player and teacher," Ely Culbertson says.

A Common Quirk.

Watching an inexpert player on the defense, the conclusion is unescapable that he holds a sort of sacred veneration for his own tricks as against a mere fondness for his partner's. Not being a psychiatrist, I am unable to account for this quaint quirk, but long experience and unbiased observation have convinced me that it actually exists. Today's hand is an illustration of this thesis.

West, dealer.

The bidding:

West	North	East	South
1 ♠	2 ♡	Double	2 N T
Double	Pass	Pass	Pass

South's rescue of the two heart double was one of those bids that turn out either very well or catastrophically, and for that reason is difficult to criticize. On this particular hand it must be admitted that the rescue had a splendid outcome.

West opened the King of spades, instead of his fourth highest, since on the bidding he felt sure that the declarer had something like A J x. With the 10 in dummy, declarer could have won the first trick and would still have been assured of two spade tricks, but he was afraid that if he did this he might never again be able to enter his own hand, therefore he let the King hold the trick.

West sensed the true state of affairs in the spade suit, and therefore made the correct shift to the fourth-best diamond; dummy played low, East won with the King, and returned the nine, forcing dummy's Ace. The low club was now led to declarer's Queen, and West won.

West saw the danger of declarer's running off the diamond tricks if he, West, were to cash the Queen. He therefore guarded against this, as well as against being subsequently thrown on lead, by cashing the Ace of hearts and then exiting with the 10 of clubs. West now felt certain that declarer could not return to his hand to clear possible diamond tricks without sacrificing his apparently sole entry of the spade Ace.

West's defense had been perfect but he had not reckoned on the shortsightedness of his partner. Dummy won the club 10 and led a low heart. Now it was up to East, and East went to pieces!

He knew, of course, that the declarer had the nine of hearts (since otherwise he certainly would have had to lead a heart honor from dummy) and all East could see was that he was about to lose his precious heart Queen. Therefore he jumped up with the latter card, and after that it was all over. East had neither a spade nor a diamond to lead, and therefore could not avoid throwing dummy back on lead with a heart or a club. Dummy cashed all its good tricks and declarer's spade Ace acted for the eighth and fulfilling trick.

Obviously had East sacrificed his heart Queen and allowed declarer's nine to win the trick, the contract's defeat would have been inevitable. Declarer would force out the diamond Queen, but West would exit with a low diamond and still have to make a spade trick.
